SARAH BERNHARDT SUCCUMBS TO ILLNESS

Our City comment & discussion by THOMAS D. WATSON

Will the Council Take Snap Judgment On the Bus Permits?

IN Saturday's edtiorial we commented on the rumor going the rounds to the effect that the Glendale city council was planning on granting at its next meeting a bus franchise to a local company, now being promoted.

We hope there is no basis for this rumor. We do not wish to think that our city council would rush through so important a proposition as a bus franchise.

The transportation problem is one of utmost importance to the future of Glendale, and we do not think it should be settled by any five citizens of Glendale, even if they have the power for the moment to answer it according to their personal desires. It should be answered by the people at large.

* * *

WE are convinced that a lower fare will enable our city to grow faster than any other agency. There has been some grumbling lately by a few local merchants over the fact that many of our citizens do not do all their trading here and some are of the opinion that a continued high fare would keep trade in Glendale. This we think is a mistaken idea, because anything that hinders growth will halt volume of patronage.

If the committee appointed by the chamber of commerce is able to bring the Pacific Electric to a realization of the wisdom of lower fares we would be in favor of allowing the Pacific Electric a bus franchise. What chance would this committee have to get lower fares from the Pacific Electric if the city council grants a franchise to a competing company at a time when the Pacific Electric is considering the committee's request?

* * *

ONE would think our city council would profit by past experiences and cease acting on snap judgment in important affairs of our city. Let us have some mature judgment and stop making these costly mistakes.

* * *

TOMORROW the citizens of Eagle Rock vote on whether or not they annex their city to Los Angeles. Those in favor of annexation believe that annexation to Los Angeles is the only way they can be assured an ample supply of water and proper sewer facilities.

* * *

THERE are several cities in the San Fernando valley which are facing the same problems. If they would get together and thresh the matter out we are quite sure they could take care of the proposition without annexing to Los Angeles.

Glendale is in a way to solve the sewer problem and there is no reason why both Burbank and Eagle Rock could not join with them and make it a consolidated one.

* * *

SHOULD Eagle Rock vote to annex to Los Angeles it will automatically drop out of the Glendale union high school district and be compelled to send the children to a Los Angeles high school.

Eagle Rock would be sorely missed from the district, for it has been more than generous in its support.

PEPPER TREES FALL ON SAN FERNANDO

Widening of Street Lays Ornamental Timber Low at Curb Edge

Business development along San Fernando road in the neighborhood of Park avenue and the desire of property owners to make this one of the most metropolitan thoroughfares in Southern California by widening it and the installation of ornamental lights has resulted in the cutting down of a row of pepper trees on the west side of San Fernando road, from Park avenue south. According to W. Siemsen and a crew of men who were at work there this morning, orders were issued by L. H. Deward, foreman of the street department, for the taking out of 19 pepper trees, to clear the way for widening this boulevard.

SUNDAY CRASHES INJURE TWO IN GLENDALE

Mrs. Betty Armstrong and Mrs. Wilson Minor Are Victims of Auto

Mrs. Betty M. Armstrong, 427 East Elk street, was injured Sunday afternoon at the corner of Colorado and Louise when the car in which she was riding collided with a machine driven by David Donwell of 123 North Glendale avenue. The injured woman was rushed to the Glendale sanitarium, where it was found that her injuries were not of a serious nature. She was later taken to her home.

In another accident that occurred at the corner of Brand and Doran at 11 o'clock yesterday morning Mrs. M. Wilson Minor of 1151 San Rafael street, was slightly injured. She was taken to her home. The car in which she was riding collided with a car operated by Dr. George F. Newhall, 328 East Dryden street.

Automobiles operated by John Smalley, 624 Sierra avenue, and Mrs. L. D. Brooks, of Los Angeles, came together at the corner of Brand and Broadway at 12:30 o'clock this morning. No one was injured.

AUTO PARK CAMPER IS STRICKEN ILL

J. W. Means, a boxmaker, whose home is at 303 Victor avenue, Corona, and who registered on March 21 at the auto camp ground at 520 South San Fernando road, was taken ill at that place, yesterday afternoon. He was rushed by Mr. Hamilton, owner of the camp ground, to the Glendale sanitarium, where medical treatment was given.

In the car owned by Mr. Means at the camp ground were found some woman's clothing, a woman's wig, a 38-calibre revolver, and other things. Means, it is believed, will be able to leave the hospital today.

LA CRESCENTA TO BALLOT ON SCHOOL BONDS

Also to Select Trustees for Glendale High School Board From District

LA CRESCENTA, March 26.—The $45,000 school bond election, also the election of a trustee for this district and a trustee for the Glendale high school will be held at the La Crescenta school next Friday. The over-crowded condition of the local school and the daily increase in attendance make the voting of the new bonds an actual necessity. Dr. B. H. Smith, the present clerk of the board, in an interview gives a most comprehensive view of the school situation for this district. Dr. Smith stated the present assessed valuation of the La Crescenta school district is $1,885,000, an increase of $900,000 since the last bonds were voted. The present bond issue against this district is $38,000—the proposed new bonds, $45,000, to be used as follows: Build two new classrooms to the La Crescenta school building, installation of heating plant, improving school grounds, repainting and repair of La Crescenta school building, purchase of ground and the building of the first unit of three rooms of the Montrose school and additional school equipment and furniture for both schools.

The average daily attendance for last year was 141. The average attendance this school year, up to March 1 was 227. The total enrollment for this year so far is 290.

The trustees anticipate that there will be an enrollment of 300 or more at the opening of school in September. To provide proper instruction for that number we should have nine school rooms. At present there are only six rooms. By carrying out this building program as planned, should the bonds carry, we will be prepared to take care of the rapidly increasing number for a few years to come. Should the bonds fail to carry we will be compelled to resort to one of two things—half day sessions or refuse to enroll more than 210 pupils. The present school trustees are Homer A. Baldridge, Dr. B. H. Smith and C. E. Culberson, whose term expires this year, but filed his petition for re-election at the urgent request of his many friends.

STRAY AUTO FOUND

An automobile belonging to M. L. Warner, of 1057 West 74th street, Los Angeles, was found at the corner of San Fernando and Milford by Glendale officers, yesterday. The owner of the car will be notified at once as to the whereabouts of his machine.

$55,000 IS PLEDGED BY BAPTISTS FOR NEW CHURCH HOME BUILDING

Total of $125,000 to Be Secured for the Erection of the Edifice That Is Called for by the Plans

AMOUNT REPRESENTS 37 CHURCH MEMBERS

Belief That the Total Amount Will Be Raised Or Promised Before the End of the Week Is Expressed at Sunday Meeting

Fifty-five thousand dollars was pledged in less than one hour, Sunday afternoon, by the members of the First Baptist church of Glendale toward the $125,000 necessary for the construction of the new church this organization proposes to erect here. This large amount was contributed by 37 members. The general belief is that the total amount asked for will be raised before the close of the present week.

The meeting Sunday afternoon was under the direction of Rev. F. H. Divine of Brooklyn, N. Y., who came to the Pacific coast for the express purpose of assisting several of the Southern California churches to finance their proposed buildings.

Following the meeting Rev. Divine stated that this is the first time in his life that such a wonderful response has been made to his call for church-building funds. He predicted yesterday that there will be little trouble in raising the entire amount necessary.

Meetings of the members of the church for the purpose of raising the additional money necessary for the construction of the church, will be held in the church on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings of this week and all day next Sunday.

A building committee of twenty-five has been organized for the purpose of putting over the church-building campaign. The two outstanding subcommittees of this main committee are the sub-building committee and the finance committee. The sub-building committee is composed of George Bentley, chairman; J. L. Gray, Park Arnold, J. M. Banker and P. L. Hatch. The finance committee consists of the following: Roy Kent, chairman; J. Ray Bentley, Harry Chase, J. R. Detwiller and W. W. McElroy.

Plans for the new church building are now being drawn by the architectural department of the Roy L. Kent company. It is expected that ground for the new building will be broken within two months.

BIG BUILDING IS RUMORED PLANNED FOR THE SUMMER

Building rumors are afloat in Glendale today.

If these rumors become realities, Glendale securities will be set ahead about 10 points.

Although no confirmation could be secured this morning, it was stated on good authority that the Owl Drug company, which maintains a number of stores in Los Angeles and other Southern California cities, has secured an option on the southeast corner of Brand boulevard and Colorado for $150,000. This piece of property, it is understood, is 150 feet on Colorado by 150 feet on Brand, and takes in the Cizek Auto Electric company; Warren, real estate; Dutton, real estate; Robinson Bros., storage, and the garage. The hearsay does not include anything in the way of what the Owl company will do after securing the site, but it naturally follows that, if these rumors are true, that firm will erect a building in which to house its own drug store and other business establishments. That such a building would be several stories in height goes without saying.

Another "hot" rumor that reached the Glendale Press office this morning was to the effect that Sid Grauman, the popular theatre man of Los Angeles, has purchased or secured an option to purchase the lot on the east side of Brand boulevard, just north of the Jewel City Undertaking parlors, between Wilson and California.

The assumption is that if this rumor should turn out to be true, Mr. Grauman will doubtless construct on that lot a strictly up-to-the-minute theatre, with stores on the main floor and offices above.

BIKE STOLEN

A bicycle belonging to Herald Kreisel, 722 South Adams street, was stolen from in front of the Christian church, corner Colorado and Louise, at 9:15 o'clock last night. Up to this time it has not been located.

GLENDALE HIGH WINS SECOND IN MEET

Covina Wins First But Local Team Surprises Its Friends

As predicted by Coach Hayhurst, Covina's team won in the big Central League track meet Saturday, but the coach was agreeably surprised to have his own boys come in second in spite of the strong competition of other teams which had confidently counted on winning. Monrovia was third, Alhambra fourth, South Pasadena fifth, and Citrus Union sixth.

In pole vault first, second and third places were won by Glendale Lercher first, Earl Boehm second, in the following order: Frank Lercher first, Earl Boehm second, Howard Elliott third.

Carlyle Bailey was second in 440-dash and Weldon Hampton third in 220-yard.

Richard Kelsey scored second in 220-yard low hurdles.

Howard Elliott won second place in shot put.

Cliston Clark was second and Leslie Lavelle fourth in discus throw.

Glendale also came in second on relay race, the team being composed of Weldon Hampton, Richard Kelsey, James Purdy and Carlyle Bailey.

CONSTRUCTION OF NEW THREE-STORY BUILDING BEGINS

At Corner of Broadway, Maryland, by H. S. Burns and S. P. Davis

Workmen are busy at the northeast corner of Broadway and Maryland demolishing the cement posts and removing the fence erected by Mr. Gross when he owned the property, to make the ground ready for the erection of the three-story and basement building to be erected there by H. S. Burn and S. P. Day is.

Mr. Burn stated this morning that plans are now being made by May & Hellman for a building to cover the entire lot or 50x133 feet, of goldbond brick with terra cotta trim, which is to cost $100,000.

As soon as the plans are completed and bids can be secured, work will start, probably about the 15th of April.

Already there are three applicants for the first floor and basement, one of them desiring it for a department store. The two upper floors will be finished as 22 single apartments of room, bath and kitchenette.

Originally this firm planned to build a one-story structure, but those plans were discarded in favor of the present ones.

INTERSCHOOL CUPS ARE PRESENTED ON SATURDAY

Glendale Avenue Gets Two Trophies From Federated P.-T. A.

The last day of school at the Glendale avenue and Wilson avenue Intermediates was marked by receipt of the fruits of the victory in the track meet contests which had been staged the day before at the Glendale avenue campus. Two cups were presented at Glendale avenue, one to the school as a whole for winning the championship of the Intermediate division with a score of 156½ points against Wilson's 142 5-6 points. This cup had been provided by the Federation Parent-Teacher association, and will be held by the school until the next annual track meet determines who shall hold it.

Another and similar silver cup was received by the girls of the Glendale avenue school for credits of 101½ points against 47½ points won by Wilson avenue girls.

The ceremony was marked by a series of peppy and enthusiastically delivered yells for Supervisor Blanford, for the coaches, the teachers, and P.-T. A. federation, of which Mrs. Eustace B. Moore is president.

At the Wilson avenue school another silver cup was presented for prowess in the boys' division, which secured 95 1-3 points against 54 2-3 points won by the boys' division of Glendale avenue.

It would seem that credit for the championship which has gone to Glendale avenue is due to the fine record of its girls.

At each school ribbons were presented to the individual winners.

BANDITS HOLD UP WHITTIER MAN ON LOUISE

J. M. Clifton and Companion Relieved of $79 in Cash and Checks

J. M. Clifton of Whittier, and a companion, whose name has not been learned, were held up and robbed at the corner of Louise and Garfield at 11:40 o'clock, Saturday night, according to a report turned into the Glendale police department by Mr. Clifton.

Clifton states that $25 in cash and a check payable to Gus Horton for $32.65, were taken from him and $22.50 was taken from Clifton's companion.

Clifton claims that the two fellows who conducted the robbery were young, clean shaven and both wore dark suits and caps. Immediately after the robbery was reported to the police, Officers Nunn and Baugh searched the neighborhood in which the holdup is supposed to have been committed, but could not locate either of them.

NATIONAL GUARDS DEFEAT HARROWER LABORATORY TEAM

The Glendale National Guard baseball team won their first game at Brookside Park yesterday by defeating the Harrower team with a score of 19 to 8. This looks good for the local militia as the laboratory team defeated the postoffice bunch last Sunday by a score of 21 to 0 in five inning.

The Guard team is being managed by Hennery Wendt and expects to make a good showing in the future.

Sanders Pursues Co-operative Plan

Secretary Sanders of the chamber of commerce, says there is a probability that the Van Nuys and San Fernando chambers of commerce will apply to the Los Angeles city council to know if, in the event Glendale is given the right to construct a 48-inch sewer to the sea through Los Angeles, Van Nuys and San Fernando will be permitted to connect with it.

THE A-1 GARAGE IS ENTERED AND ROBBED

The A-1 garage at the corner of San Fernando road and Elk street, was entered and robbed Friday night, according to a report turned in Saturday afternoon to the Glendale police department. A number of automobile tires, it is claimed, were stolen.

Those hiking may take the trail on the north side of the hill at the head of Cypress street or take the trail which begins just back of the Little Church of the Flowers.

GLENDALE TEAM DEFEATS CULVER CITY OUTFIT

Fast Play Seen on Glendale Ground As Teams Cross Bats

In another fast game on the grounds at Park and San Fernando the local team triumphed over the strong Culver City nine by the score of 5 to 1. Again the large crowd of cash customers were well pleased at the good showing.

The outstanding star of the game was the hurling of Manager Heidler. He struck out 15 men and allowed but two lonely hits. Not only this but also batting out the only three base hit of the game. He also made three assists.

Earl Harrison, playing first base, comes in for a good deal of praise as he handled all chances, including some difficult ones, without a miss. Reid and Pepper, two new men on the line-up, showed up well.

The box score follows:

The next meeting of this association is called for Wednesday evening, March 28, at 7:30. It will be held at the Pacific avenue school.

Mr. Roscoe Belcher of the publicity committee, announced that they would be glad if some of the candidates for the city council would come to this meeting and get acquainted with the members.

GREAT ACTRESS PASSES FROM LIFE STAGE WITH SMILE

Sends Last Message Thru Associated Press to American Friends

[By Associated Press]

PARIS, Mar. 26.—Sarah Bernhardt is dead. She passed from life's stage at 7:59 p. m., expiring in the arms of her son Maurice, who entered the room at that moment.

"I am deeply touched with the sympathetic interest of my beloved American friends."

This was Sarah Bernhardt's message to her friends overseas, given the Associated Press at 6:45 o'clock this evening by her secretary, Mme. Normand.

Madame Bernhardt received extreme unction during a sudden recovery of approximate consciousness that began about 3:10 o'clock. Father Riesler said she was sufficiently conscious to show, by movements of her hands and otherwise, that she understood the ceremony.

This morning before she went to sleep under the opiate, Bernhardt exclaimed to the friends and members of the family gathered at the bedside: "How very slow my death agony is."

While this scene was going on, workmen were carrying from the house and loading into a van the equipment and setting for the last motion picture film made by Mme. Bernhardt in which she played the part of a paralytic.

Madam Sarah Bernhardt, who at 70 years of age seemed still a girl was known to every land as "the world's greatest actress." What dissent there might have been to this estimate, and however far her detractors ventured in their attempts to minimize her right to that distinction, the numberless admirers of the 'Divine Sarah" remained convinced that never before had the stage produced an actress capable of soaring to such heights in the realm of emotional drama.

The work of Mme. Bernhardt was best where a theme afforded the greatest opportunity for a display of her powerful emotions. At the height of her career this form of acting, based principally on love, hate and jealousy, held the predominant place now dedicated to character delineations and Bernhardt never was surpassed, her critics say, in this emotional school. Hundreds of parts she either rewrote or created to suit herself, seldom being content to act them as interpreted by others.

Three generations have praised and even worshipped the art of Bernhardt, and hundreds upon thousands of people around the world have thronged to see and marvel at her acting without understanding the French language, which she invariably employed upon the stage. Once, in Rio de Janiero, she was called before the curtain more than 200 times by a wildly enthusiastic audience, and many times, in other parts of the world she was obliged to answer scores of curtain calls at a single performance.

The long life-story of Bernhardt is almost legendary. Closely woven with dramatic incident, off as well as on the stage, it was set down by herself in a lengthy volume published many years ago, and, as one of her critics has said, "through the pages of the book peers the face of a woman, a little tired, weary of her own reputation, and blessed with more than her share of the vanities of her sex." As she and others have told the story, it is summed up here:

The date of her birth, the record of which was destroyed in the flames of the Commune in Paris, was commonly accepted as October 22, 1845. Her mother was Dutch and Jewish, and her natural father a French official.

As a child Bernhardt spent much of her time with relatives in Paris, and at the age of 12 was sent to the Grand Champ Convent, Versailles, where she made her debut in a little miracle play given by the children. Even at this early age, the pale and sickly child is said to have displayed the fits of temper which were characteristic of her stage career.

After a year or two at the convent she conceived a passionate desire to become a nun. To this her mother recorded unqualified opposition, and suggested a theatrical career instead.

"She's too thin to be an actress," said her godfather. "Let her be a nun."

"I won't be an actress,' little Sarah categorically exclaimed. "Rachel is an actress. She came to the convent and walked around the garden, then she had to sit down because she couldn't get her breath. They fetched her something to bring her around, but she was so pale, oh, so pale. I was

PROPERTY DAMAGE DANGER PASSES IN IOWA

Missouri Flood Water Cuts New Channel, Threatening Nebraska

[By Associated Press]

OMAHA, Neb., March 26.—Danger of property damage to Iowa farm land from flood waters of the Missouri river opposite Onawa, Iowa, near where an ice gorge recently formed, had passed this morning as the river cut a channel through ice on the Nebraska side, but a new menace took its place as the rapid current was cutting the Nebraska banks so rapidly at Decatur, Neb., that it was necessary for workmen to begin the task of removing a small number of houses and an abandoned grain elevator to prevent them from being swept away.

FOUR DEAD IN FIRE IN THEATRICAL CENTER

[By Associated Press]

NEW YORK, March 26.—At least four persons are believed to have lost their lives in a fire that swept through a seven story theatrical boarding house in West 57th street this morning. A number of roomers were injured.

A number of people were trapped on the top floor where the blaze started. Many spectacular rescues were made.

Anna Fries, 35 years old, received fatal burns while clinging to a top floor window ledge waiting for firemen. She died while being taken down a ladder.

Margaret Lee, 19 years old, an actress, was badly burned while standing at a window waiting for the firemen.

The bodies of Margaret Lee, 65, and Emily Lee, 35, were found on the seventh floor. They were relatives of the actress, Margaret Lee, who was severely burned.

WATER RECEDES AT ONAWA

[By Associated Press]

ONAWA, Iowa, March 26.—Most of the water which spread over the lowlands on the Iowa side of the Missouri near here as a result of an ice pack ten miles long, had receded today as the river cut a channel through the ice on the Nebraska side.

At 9 o'clock this morning the river had fallen two feet since 7 a. m. and danger to Iowa territory in the vicinity was thought to have passed.

AGED WOMAN SAVES LIFE WITH LONG JUMP

[By Associated Press]

CHICAGO, March 26.—Forced to flee from her house by flames, Mrs. Agnes Barer, 70 years old, jumped from a three story window early today into a policeman's overcoat, used as an emergency life net. The coat was ripped apart but Mrs. Barber sustained only a broken leg. Mrs. Marjorie Mitchell, also injured, jumped from a second story window, alighting on a sloping porch and rolled from there onto three policemen.

BOOTLEG KILLS MANY IN PHILADELPHIA CITY

[By Associated Press]

PHILADELPHIA, March 26.—Five recent deaths from alcoholism started an investigation by federal and city authorities to trace the source of poisonous liquor they claim is being sold in the tenderloin district at ten cents a drink, or three drinks for a quarter.

STILLMAN JUDGE URGES ABOLITION OF DIVORCE

[By Associated Press]

NEW YORK, March 26.—Complete abolition of divorce is urged by Supreme Court Justice Morschauser, who presided over the Stillman case, in an article in the April number of Columbia, official organ of the Knights of Columbus, made public here today.

Declaring that he believed the abolition of divorce should be brought about by congressional legislation, he added:

"But that is a long way ahead, because there are unfortunately so many middle aged and elderly men—and some young ones—who for one reason or another, want new wives.

"But one great practical step which should be taken immediately is the passage of legislation making the decrees obtained in Paris or elsewhere in Europe invalid. It is all wrong to let rich men or women run off to Paris to get divorces. We should not allow a condition to exist which permits wealthy Americans to escape from the operation of American laws."

Justice Morschauser would have divorce cases tried in the open because he believes publicity has a wholesome effect. He would permit separations and annulments.

AIR SQUAD HEADS BACK TO THE U. S.

[By Associated Press]

PORT AU PRINCE, March 26.—The American army airplanes flying back to the United States from Porto Rico, which arrived here from Santo Domingo yesterday, began leaving shortly after 8 o'clock this morning for their next landing place, Guatanamo, Cuba. The leading plane got off at 8:11 a. m., in a strong following wind.

GREAT TRAGEDIENNE PASSES FROM LIFE STAGE WITH SMILE

very sorry for her, and the nuns told me that what she was doing was killing her, for she was an actress, and so I won't be an actress, I won't."

But fate had determined otherwise, and at the age of 14 Bernhardt was sent to a conservatory. At the end of the first year she won second prize for tragedy. A subscription among the players at the Comedie Francaise enabled her to spend another year at the conservatory, and upon the completion of this she carried off second prize for comedy. Her first public appearance was at the Comedie Francaise in August, 1862. She took a minor part without any marked success.

Five years later she emerged from laborious obscurity with her first definite success as Cordelia in a French translation of "King Lear" at the Odeon; then as Queen in Victor Hugo's "Ruy Blas," and above all, as Zanzett in Francois Coppee's "Le Passant," which she played in 1869.

Then came the Franco-Prussian war. Bernhardt increased her popularity by becoming a war nurse. In 1871 she was made a life member of the Comedie Francaise. She clashed repeatedly with M. Perrin, the manager, over the roles she should take, and once in a fit of pique fled from the theatre and decided to give up the stage. She plunged into sculpture. Her first piece, "After the Storm," finished some years later, won a place in the Salon. She returned to M. Perrin only to break with him again, incurring a forfeit of 4,000 pounds, which she paid.

She invaded England, receiving a tremendous ovation, then toured Denmark and Russia. Next she came to America, where her success was instantaneous. She toured the United States and Canada eight times in some 35 years, and appeared several times in the larger cities of South America.

Breaking with the theatrical syndicates, which denied her the use of their theatres when she refused to come to their terms, she was compelled to appear on one of her American tours in tents, convention halls and armories. She vowed never to appear in a theatre again, but on subsequent visits she came to terms with the syndicates.

The great actress was a grandmother when she last appeared in America and had suffered amputation of her right leg. Upon her arrival in New York, October, 1916, it was evident to the group of friends and admirers who gathered to welcome her that she walked with extreme difficulty.

While playing in New England she contracted a severe cold, which prompted her to take a trip south for her health. A few weeks later she underwent an operation for infection of the kidneys, and although more than 70 years of age she enjoyed complete recovery and remained in America for several months.

The injury to her knee which compelled the amputation of her leg in 1915 was attributed to many different causes. For years before the amputation the plays in which she appeared were altered to hide the fact that she was able to walk only with great difficulty. The operation was performed in Paris, and upon her recovery she reappeared on the stage to receive the greatest ovation of her career. Her manager announced that henceforth she would interpret only motionless roles.

During the World War Bernhardt made several trips to the French front and gave a number of performances for the soldiers. This, she declared, was the "incomparable event" of her life.

The memoirs of Bernhardt sedulously avoid any mention of her marital experience, and only in the middle of the bulky volume does she casually mention the existence of a son. One of her critics declared that "she never seemed to find the man who could master her."

"There was in her," he continued, "the making of a superwoman, and although she met Victor Hugo and the greatest intellectual potentates of her time, the super-man, who alone could hold her, never entered her life."

Years ago a jealous rival of her theatrical career published a satire entitled "The Story of Sarah Barnum," in which the love affairs of the actress, real and alleged, were shamelessly laid bare. Bernhardt resorted to the horsewhip to punish the author.

In 1882 the actress was married to Jacques Damala, a handsome Greek, who had made a name in the theatrical world through his work in "The Ironmaster." He later took a minor part in one of her plays, but after a year on tour they separated. Later she took him back to her home and nursed him through a fatal siege of consumption.

Mme. Bernhardt's natural son, Maurice, showed no inclination to follow the profession of his mother, and after spending a short time in the French army he married a Russian princess. She died after bearing him a daughter, and Maurice Bernhardt took a Parisienne as his second wife.

Many stories have been told of the fabulous sums accruing to the famous actress, especially in America, but authenticated figures show that the gross receipts of each tour were in the neighborhood of $500,000, of which she usually received 50 per cent. A large part of her earnings was reinvested in theatrical enterprises and at one time she owned or controlled half a dozen playhouses in Paris.

Of the more than 200 parts Bernhardt is difficult. In her youth she stage career perhaps the boldest experiment of all was the title role in a French production of Hamlet, which met with such unmistakable success that she was prompted to appear again as a man in 'L'Aiglon." Her repertory, in addition to the plays mentioned, included "Joan of Arc," "Fedora," "Adrienne Lecouvrer," "Sappho," "Theodora" and "Hermani." Her greatest successes, however, seemed to center in the Hugo and Sardou dramas, both tragedies and comedies. Many of these plays were written around her, and "fitted like a glove."

A physical description of Bernhardt is difficult. In her youth she undoubtedly was what might be called beautiful, although from the French standpoint her slimness was againts her. The greatest interest in the actress, aside from her art, was the tenacity with which she clung to her girlish appearance. At 75 she might have passed for a woman of 30, so well had the features of her younger days been preserved.

Bernhardt seems to have had no disillusions about her personal appearance. By themselves her features—high cheek bones, aquiline nose, and lips parted above an almost masculine chin—were not pleasing, but taken together they comprised the harmony of expression which gave her the title of "the divine Sarah." She admitted on one occasion that the effect of her long white face emerging from a long black sheath was by no means pleasant. "In this rig I look like an ant," she said.

Bernhardt was the most famous for her death scenes, but it is doubtful if her breathless, spellbound perhaps, audiences ever knew that many of them were played while the actress was suffering almost unbearable agonies from her various physical ailments, of which she never was heard to complain.

Patience seemed to have been one of Bernhardt's inborn characteristics. She would spend weeks and even months trying to correct technical faults in some member of her company, and then, if the subject failed to improve, she would explode and have nothing more to do with him either on or off the stage—not even speaking to him under any circumstances.

She always displayed a keen interest in the heart affairs of her troupe, and delighted in holding a "cupid's court" in her private car, at which she would require aggrieved swains and the objects of their affections to submit their differences—Bernhardt to be the final arbiter.

Another of her pastimes was gambling, although she was a poor loser. She remained jovial and vivacious as long as the game was running in her favor, but the moment her luck changed she became sullen and sarcastic. Her opponents, once they had lost to her, knew that it was gone for good, for she would throw down her cards and leave the game at the first sign of reverses.

A love for strange pets was another of Bernhardt's peculiarities. When she was a little girl she saved her money and bought a goat. She learned to love the animal so much that she wanted to become a goat-herd, and cried when her mother ridiculed the idea. During the Franco-Prussian war she raised geese for the soldiers, but grew to care so much for them that she refused to have them killed. Once in London she bought a lion-cub, a tiger and two chameleons at an auction sale. Another time she bought a baby elephant, but it grew itself out of a home. She tried for years to find a dwarf elephant, but never succeeded.

The conviviality of the dinner table was another of Bernhardt's delights. She particularly enjoyed a feast at midnight after a performance, when the members of her company were present. She drank in moderation, and seldom touched anything but champagne. She never was known to smoke.

Two of her treasures in her Paris home invariably excited the interest of visitors. One was the skull given her by Victor Hugo, on which he had written autograph verse to the actress, and the other was the coffin in which she occasionally slept. This strange bed, she explained, was padded with "memories of her dead life"—faded rose leaves and letters yellow with age.

She once expressed a wish that this coffin be her final resting place and in 1922 the idea was elaborated upon when she bought for $100 from the French government, a little granite island in the Bay of Biscay, not far from her summer home at Belle Ile, where she planned to build a magnificent tomb crowned with a marble statue of herself, the arms outstretched as if beckoning to harassed fishermen imperilled by the storms.

Death had a weird fascination for Bernhardt, and for years she contemplated it with what appeared to be an uncany humor. The wish she most often expressed was that she might die in the midst of her triumphs. "I shall play until death" she said, "and the death I hope for is the death of Sir Henry Irving died." Her English contemporary died on tour, being stricken with apoplexy after a performance in 1905.

Toward the end of 1922, it was thought this desire might shorten her life considerably, for while she was dangerously ill in her Paris home, she pitted her iron will against the physicians and prepared to resume her part in a new play by Sacha Guitry that she was playing in when stricken. She felt the end was near, her sick-room attendants said, and wanted to be acting a leading role when death rang down the curtain.

One of General Pershing's favorite stories is of the volunteer battalion of backwoodsmen who once joined General Grant. Grant admired their physique, but mistrusted their training. However, he told the "colonel" to drill his men for him. Without a moment's hesitation the colonel yelled to his command: "Boys look wild thar! Make ready to thicken and fo' lef endways! Tote yer guns! Git!"

On a busy Los Angeles street corner a checker stood and asked 150 passing motorists "Which ga oline do you use?" 63 answered "Red Crown," as against 18 for the next highest brand—a lead of 250%.

Because "Red Crown" is an all-refinery gasoline every drop of which vaporizes rapidly and uniformly in the carburetor, and is completely consumed in the cylinders, giving quick starting, smooth acceleration and maximum mileage, "Red Crown" is the popular motor fuel everywhere.

Only the parents of the two were present.

A dainty luncheon was served at the Elite, after which Mr. and Mrs. Van Wormer drove to Santa Barbara on a short honeymoon.

The bride was dressed in pearl grey, and carried a bouquet of pink bride's roses and lillies of the valley.

SAYRE PICTURES EXHIBITED HERE

The first of a series of interesting exhibit by F. Grayson Sayre, was held Friday night at the Sayre home, 914 South Central avenue. There had been many requests from friends who wished to see Mr. Sayre's water-color paintings and so this series of exhibits has been arranged. Mr. Sayre plans to hold them about every two weeks. There were twenty-four large pictures and twenty-five small sketches exhibited, which were made by Mr. Sayre last autumn in Palm Springs.

A very interesting talk on the composition of the pictures, where and how the subjects were found and how the large pictures were made from the sketches, was given by Mr. Sayre.

The guests included Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Boland, Mr. and Mrs. William Hunter, Mr. and Mrs. Woodson, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Clarke, Mr. and Mrs. H. D. Fortier, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Henry, Mrs. L. G. Scharnikow, Mrs. L. T. Young, Mr. Howard, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Sayre, Misses Clara, Helen and Viola Sayre.

An interesting musical program was also given, including a group of vocal solos by Mrs. Scharnikow and Miss Helen Sayre.

"THE NINETY AND NINE" AT THE GLENDALE

Director David Smith, noted for his animal touches and human interest in his pictures, has not left a stone unturned in producing "The Ninety and Nine," the Vitagraph big special production showing at the Glendale theater today and Tuesday. In the forest fire scenes, which form the big thrill in the picture, Mr. Smith has secured flashes of deer running to escape the fire, rabbits, foxes and other wild creatures scurrying to safety. He and his camera man penetrated into the heart of a burning area to get flashes of falling trees and flying sparks. There was no thought of danger during the making of the production. Mr. Smith's sole idea was to get realisms, and when, with the aid of the patrol, he was able to penetrate the heart of a burning area he made the most of his opportunity. At times Director Smith and his assistants were forced to fight the fire in order to prevent serious catastrophe, and once they penetrated the area so deeply that they were entirely surrounded by fire and had to fight their way out.

NEW BOOKS AT CITY LIBRARY

Among the books recently placed on the shelves of the local public library are four by Sydney Watson. The titles are "The Lure of a Soul," "In the Twinkling of An Eye," "Scarlet and Purple," and "The Mark of the Beast." These books have created quite a stir among the reading public in the British Isles, as well as in many quarters in this country. Mr. Watson has written a number of other books, but in these later works he has far surpassed his former efforts. Those who have known or read any of his books will be glad to know of this opportunity to secure these books from the local library.

MRS ALVIN BROWN IS SHOWERED AT THE EMERY HOME

Miss Olive Belle Emery and Mrs. Owen Emery entertained with a miscellaneous shower Saturday at the home of the latter, 627 North Jackson street, in honor of Mrs. Alvin Brown, formerly Miss Josephine Emery. The color scheme of orchid and rose was carried out in the decorations and flowers of sweet peas and carnations. A number of interesting games provided amusement for the guests. Hunting Easter eggs was one of the contests which caused a great deal of merriment, the prize being awarded to Miss Anna Merriken, who turned it over to the guest of honor.

A feature of the party was the mock wedding in which little Miss Lois Merriken, dressed as a bride, and Jack Emery, as the bridegroom, took part. They entered as the wedding march was being played. At the close of this clever ceremony Miss Lois presented Mrs. Alvin Brown with a large bouquet of orchid sweet peas, and then marched out with the little bride groom. Miss Lois came in again with a very large basket, fixed up as an Easter nest, with little rabbits, which were distributed as favors to the guests, Easter eggs, chickens, etc. In this nest was a poem written to Mrs. Alvin Brown.

During the party recitations were given by the following children: Miss Lois Merriken, "Maw Fixes It;" Miss Betty Brown, "The Great Wide World;" Jack Emery, "Aunty."

Sees Patriotism in Athletic Training

SANTA MONICA, March 24.—"The stability of the American republic rests on the continued popularity of athletics in this country," said Snowy Baker, famous Australian sportsman, last night at the initial smoker of the newly organized Santa Monica Athletic club, held in Fraser hall on Pickering pier.

"As Waterloo was won on the cricket fields of Eton, so the fate of the world in the great war was decided by the factor of American youth trained on the diamonds, track fields, tennis courts, plunges and gymnasiums of this country," he declared, and drew the well known parallel of decaying Rome, whose fall was imputed to the abandonment of manly sport and exercise to the enticements of ease, luxury and good living.

Bus Service May Embarrass Beach City

SANTA MONICA, March 24.—The 36 motor busses per hour that will shortly be inaugurated in the new schedule of the Bay Cities Transit company, in fulfillment of the terms of their exclusive franchise recently awarded by the city, will compel the department of public safety to make drastic traffic adjustments, according to a statement from Mayor S. L. Berkeley.

Main street, already narrow and badly congested, will be literally choked, the mayor told his fellow commissioners. The busses cannot well be rerouted, he said, and the only feasible remedy until Main street is widened is to prohibit all parking the entire length of this thoroughfare.

KINGDOM OF PRUSSIA

Brandenburg became the Kingdom of Prussia when Frederick I., son of Frederick William, the Great Elector, received his legacy in 1701. Frederick I was known as "King of Prussia."

Bruner, Miss Lucille Bruner, Misses Adell and Goldie Drake, L. F. Drake, Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Durrent, Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Grimes, Mr. and Mrs. R. D. PURELY PERSONAL

Mrs. L. C. Dyer of St. Louis, Mo., wife of the Missouri congressman who was author of the Dyer anti-lynching bill, was in Glendale Sunday to attend services at Central Christian church, and hear her former pastor, Clifford A. Cole, preach. She was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Cole for dinner and spent the afternoon with them. Mr. and Mrs. Dyer returned very recently from a trip to China and the Philippines. When they landed at Seattle, a telegram was handed to Mr. Dyer stating that his secretary, who had been with him for 10 years, had dropped dead, so he hurried on to St. Louis, while his wife came on down the coast for a visit they had planned to make together.

Allen Williams and wife, who came to Glendale from Garden City, Kansas, recently, for a fews weeks' visit with relatives, have decided to stay and are living at 447 Ivy. Mr. Williams has been employed by one of the Los Angeles banks.

Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Yeoman of 113 North Orange street entertained as their guests over the week-end Mr. and Mrs. Fred Little of Anaheim. On Saturday they enjoyed a luncheon and matinee party in Los Angeles. Mr. and Mrs. Little just recently returned from a several months' visit in New York and Michigan and are delighted to be back in Southern California.

John W. Cotton, artist, of 1137 San Rafael avenue is on a camping and sketching trip at Palm Springs.

STATE WILD FLOWER EXHIBITION IS SET FOR APRIL 13

The Ninth annual State exhibit of California wild flowers will be held at the Fairmont hotel, in San Francisco, April 13 and 14. It will be open to the public. Its object is to show the beauty, variety and value of the native flowers and shrubs as among the important assets of civilized communities.

The plan has the endorsement and hearty co-operation of the San Francisco Board of Education and of many eminent educators and naturalists. These beautiful and educational displays of the native plant life of California, have been held annually in San Francisco since the year of the exposition, in 1915. They are given under the auspices of the Wild Flower Conservation league; founded during the exposition year by those who desire to assist this great educational movement. A persistent battle was waged for two years by the league, for the protection of the Toyon, California's famous red Christmas berry; and in 1921, their efforts were crowned with partial success through a bill passed by the California legislature, assuring certain protective measures for these trees, and regulating the sale of their berries. The league then started "Toyon clubs" and this year distributed thousands of packages of the seeds, which are easily propagated. The work is directed by Mrs. Bertha M. Rice of Saratoga, Founder of "Wild Flower day," assisted by Mrs. Roxana Ferris and the Science department of Stanford university. Chancellor Emeritus David Starr Jordan of Stanford University is Honorary President of the league, and will be among the speakers at the coming exhibition.

A beautiful wild flower masque has been written for the occasion and dedicated to the state exhibit, by Carroll DeWilton Scott, famous naturalist and poet of San Diego. The pageant depicts the annual gathering of the native blooms and their voiceless plea for protection. It will be presented by one hundred little children in dainty flower costumes. Those desiring to communicate with the Wild Flower Conservation league may write to Roland Rice, secretary, 698 Bush street, San Francisco.

'I THIRST' IS SUBJECT OF REVEREND KRINGEL

Palm Sunday services of the Redeemer Evangelical Lutheran church were very impressive. The gospel lesson was read from Matthew 21:1-9, "Christ's Entry into Jerusalem!" The Rev. Henry O. Kringel then delivered the sermon, as taken from St. John 19:28, namely, the fifth word of Christ, uttered on the cross: "I thirst!"

The speaker said, in part:

"Who is God? This question is so important that no human being can afford to neglect considering it. At the same time, it is so difficult that the wisest and most learned of men have tried to answer it. Yet human ingenuity has failed to find a satisfactory answer. To the atheist, God is nothing; to the pantheist, God is everything; to the scientist, matter or energy; to the fatalist, necessity; to the agnostic, he knows not what! Thank God, we Christians need not thus grope in the dark. In His word God has revealed Himself unto us, and that states that 'God is a Spirit.' He is eternal, omnipresent, omnipotent, omniscient, holy, just, faithful, benevolent, merciful and gracious. Yes, God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believed in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life! (John 3:16). Now, we know that Christ was born at Bethlehem, lived and preached and performed his miracles in Palestine; and we know that he was finally brought before the judgment seat of Pontius Pilate, around whom the Jews had crowded about, crying (after the question had been addressed to them, 'What then shall I do with the man who is called Christ Jesus?') until they were hoarse: 'Away with Him! Crucify Him! Crucify Him!'

"Now, then, considering the passion of our Lord, one question continually arises: Why must Jesus suffer all of these things? If one drop of the blood of the Son of God was sufficient to cleanse all the world of its sins, why did He have to shed all His blood? If the suffering of the least pain on the part of the Son of God had an infinite value in atoning for man's sin, why did Christ have to suffer all the pain deserved by all sinners?

"That there must be an answer to these questions, no child of God will doubt. God does nothing without cause. The history of Christ's passion shows that God spared His Son humiliation wherever it could be done, as we read in John 19:41, Acts 2:27. This also shows that, where suffering had to be endured, there was an important reason for it. Whenever, therefore, we are unable to answer such questions, the only proper thing to do is to acknowledge that we know only in part, to search as far as possible into the matter, and to humbly await God's full revelation in eternity. Let us bear this in mind when we now proceed to the fifth word of Christ on the cross: 'I thirst!' Let us first try to learn what suffering this meant; and, second, why Christ had to undergo this suffering.

"The meaning of Christ's word, 'I thirst,' offers no difficulty; but the amount of agony which it implies is not so easily shown. Think of a wanderer on his way through a desert. From above the sun sends down his burning rays, scorching and killing every green thing. The wind is blowing; but it is not the refreshing breeze which in our northern regions tempers our summer heat, but a blast as from a hot oven. The ground over which the traveler walks is sand—hot, glowing, deep sand—too hot for naked feet to bear. In it there is not a blade of grass, and as far as the eye can search, no spring of water. Under such conditions, the moisture of the body evaporates quickly, and the consequence is a terrible, tormenting thirst. The parched tongue clings to the palate. The arms hang down slack; the legs weaken and can hardly drag the body farther. A single day of such tormenting thirst may mean unconsciousness; another, death!

"Yet, if Christ had had to bear only so much, He would not have complained. He was perfectly holy and therefore able to bear infinitely more than we. What would have killed ordinary human beings in two days, He had borne for forty—and then He uttered no complaint. But here on the cross His condition was far more terrible. Here He bleeds from many wounds. He had not only endured the most intense mental agony, but had, during the last terrible hours, been battling against all the powers and princes of darkness. His 'I thirst!' stands for the terrible torments of the condemned sinners. Jesus Christ was made sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him.

"But why did Jesus suffer so intensely? That the Scriptures might be fulfilled.' Why had the Scriptures prophesied this, and why was it so important that they should come exactly true? That all the world might know that in this intense suffering our dear Saviour was not granted the most modest wish. He was not only to say, 'It is finished,' He was to prove it, and prove it He did. All the world was to be convinced of this fact: Christ's bitterest enemies were to bear witness to this great truth, that He, who had undertaken to become the world's Redeemer, received not the slightest relief in His bitter suffering and death; that from the cup of suffering He drank even the last bitterest drop of the bitter dregs. He has redeemed us thereby from our sins, and now, through faith in Him, we have everlasting life.

"'It is finished!' For now all is finished, that heaven decreed, the prophets foretold, the patriarchs hoped for, and now the following passage is found written almost on every page of the New Testement, wherever the banner of a Christian is unfurled, on each sacrament and on every means of grace: 'Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners.'"

NEWS AND VIEWS OF EAGLE ROCK CITY

ANNEXATION IS QUESTION FOR TUESDAY

Both Sides Rest After Whirlwind of Oratory and Propaganda

Tuesday morning at 6 o'clock the question of annexation will come before the voters of Eagle Rock for its final testing. It is impossible to state now even a possibility of victory for one side or the other. Both have struggled desperately to gain supremacy through mass-meetings, neighborhood campaigns and advertising. The counting of the ballots cast tomorrow will be the only way to find out which faction has won the greatest number of followers. Earnest workers on both sides have done their utmost to improve their municipality, whichever way they believed was the right way, either through consolidation or by staying a small, self-governed city.

The mass meeting at the Central school tonight will wind up the campaign of the opposed forces, in a vivid summary of all the disadvantages of consolidation. The side in favor of annexation has been rather quiet of late, but it has built up a strong following.

Chamber of Commerce Postpones Meeting

The meeting of the Eagle Rock chamber of commerce scheduled for Tuesday night has been postponed until some day next week, which will be announced at a later date. Several of the members are away at this time, making necessary the postponement of the meeting.

A young man who speaks from experience says that it is easier to keep company with a girl than it is to keep a wife.

REV. PROUT TELLS OF ANTI-CHRIST IN WORLD

"We are facing today the greatest deceptions of all ages, in the work of spiritual agencies claiming to be of divine character," affirmed Rev. C. S. Prout before an audience which filled the Seventh Day Adventist gospel tabernacle on Myrtle avenue, Eagle Rock, Sunday night. Last Day Delusions was the theme of the discourse, and special reference was made to the subject of antichrist.

Opening his Bible to the epistles of John, the speaker read several texts speaking of the antichrist, which could not, he said, be limited to any one time or place or organization. Antichrist is not open opposition to Christ such as is shown by the atheist or infidel, or by some religion like Mohammedanism or Buddhism. Antichrist is pre-eminently a deceptive power, a delusion clothed in the robes of Christianity, a close imitation of the true religion, so cunningly disguised that it deceives all who are not thoroughly established upon the Word of God.

Antichrist will do signs and wonders in the name of Christ, the speaker said. But men may perform miracles without being Christians at all. Many people are deceived by these things. We are living in a time when the public runs after the sensational. The speaker pointed to the example of the great apostles, Paul and Peter. These servants of God performed many mighty miracles, even raising the dead, but they never heralded their miraculous powers anywhere. You may read the writings of these men and you will not find a single reference made to any of the mighty works which they performed. When you find someone advertising himself as a wonderful healer, etc., you may be sure that he is not an agent of Christianity.

Rev. Prout will speak again at the same place Wednesday evening. His theme will be "The Greatest Romance of All the Ages." Special music will be a feature of the program.

Even watered stocks have been known to take a drop too much.

DEATH OF WALTER BIRCH IS LOSS TO MASONRY

True Brother Passed Life in Active Service of the Fraternity

At the passing of Walter Birch, Masonry especially has lost one who has given many years of an active life to its service.

Mr. Birch was born December 28, 1849, at Watford, Hertfordshire, England. He was apprenticed to learn the trade of an ivory turner, but owing to ill health was compelled to abandon it. He came to the United States and reached Concord, Ill., in the month of April, 1870. He entered the railway service in 1873 and continued in that line of acitivity until about twelve years ago, when he came to California. Mr. Birch was appointed station agent at Faribault, Minn., which position he held for more than twenty years.

Mr. Birch was made a Mason in Rio lodge, No. 685, at Rio, Ill., on October 21, 1874. In 1881 he moved to Waseca, Minn., and joined Tuscan lodge, No. 77 of that city, being elected its junior warden in 1885. He moved to Faribault in 1887 and became a member of Faribault lodge, No. 9, on February 25, 1889. Was elected junior warden in 1891, senior warden in 1892 and served as Master for the years 1893 and 1894, and again in 1903. In 1895 he received from the Grand Master of Masons of Minesota, the appointment to the office of district deputy grand master. He was also elected a member of the Minnesota Masonic Veterans' association on January 16, 1896, membership in this organization being restricted to those who have been Masons for at least 25 years. He also served for many years as secretary and treasurer of the Masonic Hall Building association of Faribault.

He was a charter member and the first worthy patron of Athens chapter, Order of the Eastern Star, which body was also located at Faribault.

The funeral services at the Church of the Flowers was under the direction of Dr. Rennison, rector of the Episcopal church of Eagle Rock. The services at the grave were conducted by the Masons of Eagle Rock lodge.

SIXTEEN FAIL TO APPEAR ON SPEED CHARGES

Harry B. Foote Draws the Prize Fine of $55 and Free Board

Out of the twenty "speed" cases slated in the Eagle Rock court for Saturday morning but four appeared. The others were all taken care of by bail and through the Auto Club.

Harry B. Foote of Pasadena, who had a charge of evading the officers and also violation of the speed ordinance, lodged against him, was sentenced by Judge Cruzan to jail for ten days, and was also given a $55 fine to pay.

Teachers and Pupils Plan Ways of Enjoying the Days

This is the first day of the spring vacation for the school boys and girls. And their teachers are taking advantage of the freedom from school routine to enjoy the first of sunshiny spring days also. Several of the teachers from Central school are planning to spend most of their leisure days at Balboa Beach. These are Miss Christensen, Miss Londergan and Miss Barlow, who is the nurse at that school.

Miss Christensen will also spend a few days in Riverside.

Mr. Harwood contemplates quite a full calendar of recreation in various cities. He will first go to visit relatives in the district around Hanford, and after that will plan the remainder of his trip which will probably take in Catalina and Pomona.

BUILDING PERMITS

Building permits have been taken out recently by: C. W. Blackwell for an 8-room duplex, to be built at 251 N. Douglas street; C. W. Rowe, 273 N. Royal drive, for a 5-room residence at 321 W. Park; E. F. Nair, for another 5-room dwelling at 324 W. Myrtle; and J. E. Trinkans, 321 W. Park avenue, for a garage to be located at that address.

A small worried looking man was about to take an examination for life insurance.

"You don't dissipate, do you?" asked the doctor as he made ready for tests. "Not a fast liver or anything of that sort?"

The little man hesitated for a moment, looked frightened, and then said in a piping voice:

"I sometimes smoke a cigarette."

STOP-TALK-SELL-SWAP

"VAN ANA COURT" is the name proposed for a new, small subdivision which we will place on the market soon, unless sold within the week as a whole. Contains about 1½ acres, situated on Monterey road, near Adams, between Verdugo road and Glendale avenue. Will make 13 good sized lots and considering the location and other advantages should sell them all in a day. Get our price and terms on this for QUICK SALE.

BUY THIS AND WIN: Every fellow is looking these days for something to turn quick and make a profit. This is the thing he is looking for; FIVE LOTS, 48x150, in one piece, situated on good residential street. Either build and sell the houses or sell the lots at retail and make a profit quick; price for all, only $6000.

EAGLE ROCK Business Lot: This has evidently been overlooked by the wise buyers, otherwise it could not be had for this money; the size is 50x143, located where business is building in this thrifty city and can be bought now, QUICK, for $2250; $1400 to handle.

LODI, the land of the FLAME TOKAY, dwelling houses, business property aggregating $30,000; about $16,000 equity; will consider exchanges, all or any part for Glendale houses, vacant or business. This is one of the growing cities of central California and IS GOOD.

BUSINESS CHANCE: Some one with some cash is looking for just such a chance as this; if you see this, Mr. Man, lose no time in getting in touch with our Mr. M. A. Stumpf, who will explain in detail a business proposition that will pay you better than $5000 per year, with NO CHANCE to lose unless you lay down. This business has been worked up from nothing by its present owner to a good thrifty income and can even be increased by the right party by adding new lines to double the present volumn; $7,000 is the price, which includes real estate, stock, fixtures and good will. (Less cash will handle). SEE THIS and be SORRY—NOT.

SOUTH CENTRAL AVENUE: Coming business property; according to present quotations in this locality, this lot, 56x139, should be worth considerable more than this price, $5000, within a short time. Cash necessary to handle, $1000.

ALLEGED BOOTLEG LIST AMUSES WASHINGTON

Four Hundred Names of Distinguished People Which Failed of Conviction

Special Correspondence

WASHINGTON, March 26.—Of the most amazing, and certainly the most amusing things that have happened for some time here, was the publication a few days ago of an alleged bootlegger's list. There were over 400 names in it, and fully 200 of them were very well-known names in Washington. That list jolted the Capitol.

It included the names of six officials of the State department, five admirals, four generals, a round dozen of naval commanders, 26 colonels, 27 majors, 12 captains, 10 lieutenants, and 41 women of good social position, and dozens of representatives of families that have been prominent in Washington for generations. Of course, getting down to brass tacks, it was simply a list of names. There was nothing to prove that any man or woman in it had ever bought liquor from the man whose quarters were raided. Indeed, he rushed into print with an affidavit that it was a list of persons to whom he hoped to sell automobiles. And, besides, there was an anguished chorus of protest and denial from the persons listed. California did not figure in the list, it seems, unless some of the army and navy people on it may have been at one time stationed at the Presidio or Mare Island navy yard.

Two rather unusually interesting Californians met in Washington during the past week—Edwin Markham and Mrs. William Fitzgerald; the one known certainly throughout the English-speaking world, and the other well-known to the women of her own state, for Mrs. Fitzgerald is the head of the California State Federation of Women's Clubs. Edwin Markham was the star guest of Wednesday's open forum of the National Popular Government league, where he discussed the Politics of Jesus. Mrs. Fitzgerald of Stockton was one of his interested auditors. She came here for the California Anti-Narcotic league to awaken interest and bespeak influence in combating the narcotic evil to which California seems to be more awake than some of the other states. Mrs. Flezgerald is the wife of a well-known California newspaper owner and publisher. She argues that the drug evil is an international question, one on which Washington must reach an agreement with other nations, for the consumption of imported habit-forming drugs is growing in this country by leaps and bounds.

Among other officials who promised her sympathy and support she saw Senator Samuel Shortridge just before he started to his California home. He planned to go directly to San Francisco, and, after a short stay at his home in Menlo Park, to take a motor trip through North California. He is a member of a committee appointed by the senate to visit the federal prisons at McNeil's Island, Leavenworth and Atlanta, for the purpose of devising methods for the establishment of productive labor among the prisoners.

Two others of the California delegation left Washington during the week—Representative Arthur M. Free of San Jose, and Representative Charles F. Curry of Sacramento. Mr. Free left for home earlier than he expected because he has a case in court—a contested will coming up shortly. Mrs. Free and the children will remain in Washington until school closes. Later, Mr. Fee may go on the War department's Alaska trip. Before he left the Capitol he was re-elected head of the California Society of the District of Columbia.

Representative Curry, with his daughter and his sister, Mrs. Peterson, started home about the same time as Representative Free. Miss Curry was bridesmaid at the recent marriage of Miss Erma Strong, daughter of Representative George E. Strong of Kansas.

Mrs. Herbert Hoover is just now very much absorbed in a campaign for the better physical education and development of girls and women. It is the natural growth of her work as active—very active—head of the Girl Scouts of America, of which Mrs. Harding is honorary president. The War department has endorsed Mrs. Hoover's plans and is greatly interested in a conference which she is arranging of representatives of public and private schools, universities and colleges, playground and recreational associations throughout the country, to be held in Washington beginning April 6. Invitations for the conference were sent out in the name of the National Amateur Athletic federation, of which Mrs. Hoover is the only woman vice-president.

Last Tuesday Mrs. Hoover shared honors with Mrs. H. W. Hardinge of Forest Hills, Long Island, as the special guest at a luncheon of the Cosmos club of the Woman's auxiliary of the American Institution of Mining and Metallurgical Engineers. Mrs. Hardinge is national president of the auxiliary.

By the way, Senator Shortridge's predecessor, former Senator James Phelan, has been breaking into print. Some of his Washington friends have been receiving copies of his recently published reminiscences of his journeys in the Orient. It is a welcome souvenir of one of Washington's most genial hosts, and patron saint of the debutantes. The book presents a clear picture of the Japanese as he saw them through admittedly prejudiced eyes. It is quite clear that he regards the Japanese problem as national and not merely local with California.

SHIP OWNERS' ASSOCIATION SUGGESTS U. S. SCRAP SHIPS

[By Associated Press]

WASHINGTON, Mar. 26. — A recommendation that the shipping board retire from business, scrap all inferior vessels, and sell its remaining tonnage to American citizens "without any restriction" was the basis of a program submitted today by a committee of the American shipowners' association.

THE MARKETS

[By Associated Press]

NEW YORK, Mar. 26.—Inability or unwillingness to meet margin calls resulted in further liquidation at the opening of today's stock market, giving the general list a reactionary trend. Selling pressure was most effective against the oils, equipments, motors and independent steels. Independent strength was shown, however, by a few issues, the most conspicuous of which was Hupp motors, which advanced a point.

Prices steadied somewhat when the week-end selling orders had been absorbed but the market still presented a spotty appearance. Operators on the long side of the market were inclined to await the outcome of the Federal Reserve board governors' meeting in Washington this week before resuming extensive activities.

New Orleans, Texas, and Mexico advanced 4 3-4 to a new high record for the year, and Owens' Bottle also established a new peak price on a gain of 1 1-2. Gains of 1 to 2 points also were registered by California Petroleum, American International Corporation and American and Baldwin Locos and elly Springfield. Gulf states steel and Allied Chemical were conspicuously heavy. Foreign exchanges opened irregular, demand sterling remaining unchanged at 4.68 5-8 and French francs dropping 8 points to 6.39 cents.

The reactionary trend was checked somewhat when short covering operations and the appearance of fresh buying power started a resumption of the upward movement in some of the recent leaders. Several of the sugars, equipments, oils, motors, shippings and public utilities made good recovery from recent heaviness. California Petroleum advanced three points to a new high level for the year and Beechnut Packing extended its gain to six points, also a new peak price. American Can and U. S. Alcohol developed marked strength, the latter gaining 2½ points. Marking up of the call money renewal rate to 5¼ per cent had a restraining effect on buying.

PUBLICITY MEN COMPLETE PLANS BOOSTING TOWN

Burbank Citizens Will Advertise in Papers of Los Angeles

Burbank business men met at the Florence cafe Saturday noon to perfect a permanent organization for the purpose of advertising the town. More than a thousand dollars has already been pledged to the fund, and the organization is planning to spend $1,000 a month the first year. The whole sum will be spent in Los Angeles newspapers, according to the present plans.

Officers for the permanent organization elected were: President, Morris Spazier; financial secretary, W. P. Coffman; recording secretary, R. W. Colburn; treasurer, J. C. Crawford; auditing committee, Messrs. Powell, Jackson and Jones; executive councillors, Messrs. Blanchard, Church, Radcliff, Riley, Graham, Ling, Isbell and Mullin.

One of the first things the executive councillors will do will be to make a rating list of the Burbank citizens. This rating list will be used as a guide for taxing or assessing the various individuals as to their share in apportionment for advertising.

After a delightful luncheon, the business was conducted and everything went through at top speed, so that a short time was occupied in transacting a good volume of business. The meeting was open to the public.

The Burbank business men present were: Messrs. E. J. Jackson, Sinclair, Radcliff, Hollomon, Ling, Fillbach, Crawford, Jones, Gullett, Wilson, Powell, Gage, Dale, Wood, Graham Young, Blanchard, Church, Spazier, Isbell, Tillson, Colburn and Riley.

The next meeting of publicity men will be at 7:30 this evening.

HAUBER RECITAL WINS ADMIRATION

LA CRESCENTA, Mar. 26.—That the second annual piano recital by the pupils of Miss Marguerite Hauber claimed the interest and admiration of those who attended, was clearly demonstrated last Saturday evening at the school auditorium, and was a splendid compliment to the work done by Miss Hauber. The program arranged by Miss Hauber was of unusual merit and beauty and included compositions by Grieg, Chopin, Grunn-Czerney, Bach, and many other composers. The pupils who participated in the program were Zella Dunlop, Melba and Ramona Bronson, Helen Rieger, Marguerite Hingston, Dorothy Ziegler, Billy Tritt, Elma Ruth Kieth, Raymond Maxwell, Dorothy Potter, Mildred and Henrietta Biescar, Jean Tritt, Grace Morrison, Constance Angier, Margaret Brown, Waltz Young, Marvin Kieth and Robert Kelson. Out-of-town artists who contributed much to the pleasure of the evening's entertainment, included Miss Dorothea Sluthman, Miss Hauber's assistant, Beulah Leitzell, Craig Fulsom and Miriam Rooser Ronkin, who gave several interpretive dances.

Don't judge a man's bravery by his conversation.

STRAY BULLET KILLS HIGH SCHOOL YOUTH

[By Associated Press]

LOS ANGELES, Mar. 26.—Robert Bell, high school student, was shot and killed by a stray bullet in a street car on Broadway between Second and Third streets here today while watching a street fight. Jackson Smith, police patrol driver, was slightly wounded. Smith, off duty after midnight, was entering an automobile homeward bound with two friends, when three men in a car raised a dispute over right of way. It developed into a brawl in which Smith's pistol fell from its holster and discharged on striking the pavement. Shots were then exchanged and the three unidentified disputants escaped.

FORESTS AND MINERS

By CHARLES H. SHINN
Forest Examiner

Twenty-two years ago, in one of the newly-created California forests (then called "reserves"), a forest officer found a prospector starting in to run a tunnel to strike a ledge on which he had filed. The miner had cut some timber outside his claim in a most wasteful way, and had let his fire burn over quite an area.

The two men had a talk about all this. Said the prospector, "We miners made California what it is. You highbrows just let me alone to develop my mine in my own way." Old forest men remember dozens of similar incidents.

It took the slow, gentle, kindly human fellowship of many forest men and many mining men in that region for a dozen or more years after the above strictly true remark was made to create a wholly different state of affairs—one in which forest men give free permits for the use of timber required by prospectors, and it is cut with care, under supervision. Timber is sold at low prices to miners who require large quantities. Families coming in get free permits for firewood.

Because of all this, it was only last year that we heard an honest old miner in a National forest say, "Don't know what we would do without our friends, the forest men."

In 1921 the total use of timber in underground mining in America was nearly three hundred million cubic feet. The increase in the annual demand from miners for timber since 1905 has been close to 50 per cent, and the miners have become hearty supporters of the doctrine of "more and better forests are needed."

WHAT DO YOU THINK OF TAGS ON CHICKENS?

Burbank Merchant Suggests Town Adopt Novel Stunt

"Why not," queries a Burbank merchant, "have an advertising stunt in Burbank that went over big in Iowa?" Since the science of advertising is the one theme that occupies the attention of the merchants of Burbank at this time, the Press reporter asked to put the suggestion in the paper.

The story is that the Business Men's Advertising club in an Iowa town staged a novel stunt. It holds a special day every two weeks, with a special name.

The day spoken of happened to be "chicken day." Top prices were paid for chicken brought to market that day. At 3 o'clock in the afternoon 25 chickens donated by the merchants were turned loose on the streets. These chickens became the property of anyone lucky enough to catch them. On one leg of each chicken was a tag good for $2.50 in trade at one of the stores. Besides this, each merchant had a special bargain offer for the day. That is one way Iowa men advertise.

CONDITIONS IN MOUNTAIN STATES

Babson Lists the Assets of the Rugged West

WELLESLEY HILLS, Mass., March 23.—Today Roger W. Babson issued his report on conditions in that section of the country which extends from the agricultural states through to the Pacific Coast states. This group consists of Montana, Wyoming, Colorado, Idaho, Utah, Nevada, New Mexico, Arizona and a part of Texas and Oklahoma.

"I am very fond of this mountain section," says Mr. Babson. "It is the section which develops those manly and robust qualities which are the backbone of American civilization. This is the West which developed Roosevelt, spiritually, mentally and physically. Rugged character of both country and people, freedom from artificial conventionality and the custom of judging men solely by what they are, characterize these mountain states. This was very forcibly brought to my mind last month, when, on my way south, I stopped in Philadelphia to call upon George Horace Lorimer, editor of the Saturday Evening Post, a man who, it is said, has the greatest potential influence of any man in America. When urging Mr. Lorimer to visit me in the South, he replied, 'Babson, the South is all right for those who want to live in big hotels and play golf—but give me the Grand Canyon of Colorado, where I can ride up and down the trails. There is something about that mountainous country that inspires me as well as rests me.' Similar statements have been made to me by many of America's greatest captains of industry. They may go to other sections of the country for amusement and diversion, but when they desire real recreation, to be rebuilt and recreated, they go out into the Rocky mountains.

"Yet," continues Mr. Babson, "this mountain section has its struggles. The same difficulties, which meet the traveler when climbing the hills and crossing the deserts, seem to confront those who have settled down to develop the country. Not only has this section suffered more than any other, but its problems are more difficult of solution. The chief industries are cattle and sheep raising, mining, lumbering and a certain amount of agriculture including the raising of very fine fruit in certain irrigated sections. All of these lines have suffered during the past few years and are only now beginning to look better.

"Readjustment in this section has been severe and prolonged, but I believe that 1923 will go down in history as a year of local improvement. Although no sharp upturn is likely, those doing business in these states will note a gradual broadening of purchasing activities and a diminishing volume of overdue accounts. From a mining standpoint 1922 was one of the worst years on record. Poor market conditions and the unusually low prices for copper, lead and zinc resulted in the closing of many mines. The value of the leading mineral products taken out of the ground in Montana in 1921 was only $16,212,000, compared with $65,573,000 in 1920. Greatest activity was noted in the mining of silver and silver-lead ores. The market for all of the non-ferrous metals is quiet, but the fundamental tendency is toward a better demand and strengthening prices. Already a number of the larger mines and refining plants have resumed operations. Progress along these lines may be slow for a few months, but it will be in the right direction. Personally, I am distinctly bullish on the copper situation and believe that Montana and the other copper districts will show the greatest percentage of increase in 1923, over 1921 and 1922, of any sections of the country. The same thing, only to a lesser extent, should apply to the cattle and sheep business."

In discussing some of the cities of the mountain section, Mr. Babson reports as follows: "Denver, a city approaching 300,000 in population, shows sales to be 105% of what they were a year ago. Car shops, packing and miscellaneous industries are about normal today. I am sure, however, that Denver and the entire state of Colorado will have a better year in 1923 than it had in 1922. Salt Lake City, Utah, with a population of about 125,000, reports greater activity in mining and smelting with an improved condition of those industries catering to the farmers. Pueblo, Colorado, with 50,000, is not yet back to normal; but I believe the tariff will help this section. It has already begun to feel the effects of a greater demand for steel and iron products. As the Colorado fuel and iron companies become more prosperous, the entire country always prospers with them.

"Phoenix, Arizona, a center of 35,000 people, shows the best conditions statistically of any city in this region. It profits not only from the mining industry, but also from cotton. This district has enjoyed not only a good cotton crop, but favorable prices. Building is active—local purchasing power increasing, and the outlook is very good. Phoenix is a very good illustration why every city should seek to diversify its sources of income. Among the other cities for which I am hopeful are Butte, Great Falls, Billings and Helena, Montana; Boise and Twin Falls, Idaho; Cheyenne, Casper and Sheridan, Wyoming; Ogden, Provo and Logan, Utah; Albuquerque, Las Vegas, New Mexico; Tucson, Douglas, Arizona, and El Paso, Texas. I am especially hopeful in regard to El Paso, because it is the outlet of northwestern Mexico, which is one of the richest sections of the American continent. Some day Mexico is going to settle down, and El Paso will greatly profit. Nearly all of these cities are fast becoming distributing centers, and in all of them there still are opportunities for men who have the Six I's of Success: Integrity, Industry, Intelligence, Initiative, Interest and Inspiration."

In conclusion, Mr. Babson said: "When studying conditions in other sections of the country, remedies for the local difficulties are usually easy to suggest. For instance, when studying conditions in New England it is apparent that the labor problem is New England's greatest handicap, and the wage workers of New England have its future in their hands. It is very apparent that the need of the South is more capital, and energy with a greater willingness to work and risk. When one is studying the problems of the Wheat Growing Sections he immediately sees that many now raising wheat should raise other products. When, however, it comes to offering a solution for the problems of these mountain states, the task is very much more difficult. Frankly, I am unable to suggest anything to these people except to continue as they have been doing. Statistics show that they are utilizing their natural resources to as great an extent as the market permits; they are endeavoring to diversify their sources of income and develope their communities along broad and permanent lines. I call your attention to the excellent results which are being obtained in the sections under cultivation by the Mormons. However one may differ with them on religion, they certainly set us all an example by applying religion to everyday work. What these faithful Mormons have done with the desert sands of Utah shows what can be done with all these Rocky Mountain states if people are willing to apply the same industry, thrift and the other fundamentals of prosperity."

When asked about general business conditions throughout the country as a whole, Mr. Babson stated that the Babsonchart shows activity 6% above normal. He is not quite as optimistic as he was a few months ago, believing that some lines are again approaching deflation. He still insists that the period of readjustment is only about 60% completed, and that any attempt to run up prices any higher at this time would result in curtailing many industries. Next week Mr. Babson will issue a report on the conditions in the Pacific Coast states.

TRIUMPHAL ENTRY MORNING THEME OF REV. COLE

Evening Subject, "Nominated and Elected" at the Central Christian

In keeping with the day held sacred all over Christendom, Palm Sunday, the anniversary of the entry into Jerusalem of the Savior of mankind, Rev. Cole of Central Christian church, preached Sunday morning on the "Triumphal Entry."

"Jesus came from Bethany, where he had been lodging, presumably with the household of Lazarus, whom he had raised from the dead a few days before," said the speaker, "and stopped in the little village of Bethphage, where he directed two of his disciples to go to ascertain house and ask for 'the a certain house and ask for 'the saying, 'the Master hath need of him.' Then they spread their garments upon the animal and seated the Master thereon. All this was prophesied nearly 700 years before by Isaiah and Ezekiel. When the city gate was reached, loving followers of the Master cut down palm branches and strewed them in His pathway, also laid their garments down for His beast to tread upon, and they cried out, 'Hosannah to the Son of David. Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Most High.'

"A significant fact about this wonderful Savior of mankind is that He owned nothing on this earth as men own things. He was born in a borrowed inn, laid in a borrowed cradle, lived after He began His ministry in a borrowed home, rode into the city on a borrowed animal, ate the Passover supper in a borrowed room and He was buried in a borrowed tomb. Yet He was the mightiest figure in history and has influenced the world for good ever since His triumphant resurrection from the grave.

"On that first day of the week when He rode into Jerusalem amid the adoring acclamations of thousands, He was the most popular man in all the Holy Land. Less than a week later He was derided and scorned, beaten and abused, spit upon and buffeted by the cruel mob, then led out to die a shameful death. It was for you! It was for me! Yet in His death was He more than conqueror for He brought light and life to all who should believe on Him.

"And today there is only one solution for all the ills that afflict mankind. That is to apply Christ's teachings wherever wrong exists. He is making His triumphal entry in the hearts of sinners, day by day."

The evening sermon subject was "Nominated and Elected," and the speaker stressed Peter's saying, that Christ's followers are "a peculiar people," nominated of their own desire for better things and elected as members of the household of faith.

"We all had a common human origin in Adam and a common spiritual origin in Abraham, when reborn into Christ. We are thereby raised to the dignity of saintship, for we are a holy priesthood unto Him who is our High Priest, even Christ.

"We are a peculiar people in our dignity—not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation. And we are also peculiar in our character, as well as in our purpose, which is to show forth the excellencies of our Christ and His teachings to the world."

Snubbing one of the 400 is an upper-cut.

FIXING A PENALTY

It is certain that the peddler of illicit drugs is not amenable to moral suasion. To accept his promise of reform would be useless, since he is sure to be a liar. If himself an addict, which is likely to be the case, his moral nature is dead. There is nothing in him to which to make appeal. Therefore the only hope of removing him as a peril to public safety, is to divorce him from contact with the public. This is the purpose of a measure now before the legislature at Sacramento. It prescribes a penalty of five years' imprisonment for the first offense, and ten for the second. Nothing is said of later offenses, doubtless because none is expected.

The penalties named may strike the judgment as harsh. A little contemplation will lead to the conclusion that they are not too harsh. If they must be regarded as desperate remedies it is because the situation is desperate. There is not, and there could not be a lower depravity than that at which abides the purveyor of illicit drugs. His calling is in itself a heinous crime. Moreover it makes him accessory to all crimes. Most of the men arrested for acts of violence, including murder, are drug addicts. Many forgeries and defalcations may be traced to the same cause. Every form of wantonness may be due either to the craving for drugs, or to indulgence. The "dope peddler" is the arch villain of villainies innumerable. The only protection against him is that of a strong wall between himself and the society that it is his business and pleasure to degrade, and poison body and soul.

PROTECTING THE "COME-ONS"

An excellent example is being set by every city that passes an ordinance protecting the investor. Such an ordinance is the one that forbids the soliciting of all and sundry to take a free ride, and as a climax to the excursion, pick up an unparalleled bargain, usually in oil stock. There always are tourists not averse to placing a little spare capital. To such many legitimate opportunities are open, but when they hear that by letting go a few dollars, they may be rich in a short time, living on fat dividends, they are listening to what is familiarly known as bunk.

It has been the wont of the smooth-tongued tempters to stand on the street corner and chirp their songs of riches into every ear. If they seem to catch the attention of an occasional ear, they swarmed about the incautious owner of the same, hustled him into a bus and away he went to the field where fortune was fondly supposed to wait. The ride, as such, didn't cost him a cent. Indirectly it was likely to cost him all the loose money he could command. In most instances he might as profitably have taken his coin and dropped it in the deepest hole he could find in the district.

Moreover, these solicitors were becoming public nuisances. They interfered with traffic. They monopolized parking space. Worse than all, they hurt the reputation of whatever community was harboring them. There is profit in oil. There is profit in realty. The way to get into contact with either is through respectable business channels. There is no reason to trust the whispered confidences of the button-holing stranger anxious to make somebody rich.

WHY THE SALOON?

An item in the news tells of the shooting of a pair of footpads who had attempted to hold up a saloon at Granite, Ill. The outcome of the event was most satisfactory, and still a point is raised that seems to need explanation. Why is a saloon? There certainly is nothing in the eighteenth amendment that contemplates the continuance of the saloon as a visible entity. It was supposed to be effaced materially, and to linger only as a memory, gradually fading to tradition. And here is the account of a saloon with customers "crowding the bar." Business had been so profitable as to lure the thieves. That they got no booty, and both were killed, is a mere detail.

Thousands of citizens voted for prohibition because the saloon, drawing young men into temptation, taking the wages of toilers, frequented often by denizens of the underworld, presumed to be a force in politics, and to defy the restraints that decency sought to impose. They thought to vote the saloon out of existence. To orderly persons the name itself had grown odious. "Saloon" became the index to the character of the activities within, and these activities were not longer to be tolerated. So the saloon was told to go, and was supposed to have gone.

If the proprietor retained the title of his place after he had changed from beer to buttermilk, he was guilty of tactical error. He hardly could have won popular favor with the sign still in place, however innocent his wares. It is time for the sign to come down.

MISTAKEN RADICALS

Eight men convicted of criminal syndicalism have just been sentenced to San Quentin. They will say, and their advocates will say, that they have been condemned for their opinions. This is no nearer the truth than that the assassin or the highwayman, imprisoned or executed, has suffered for opinion's sake. Yet the idea that they are right seems to have been driven into their perverted mentalities, and to have found permanent lodgment there. It would be unsafe for these men to be at large. In shutting them within walls it is with a feeling having scarcely more animosity than would be evoked on behalf of a lunatic necessarily restrained. The feeling would be more that of regret that men could have been so blind to their own interests; of pity for them as the victims of their own folly.

These eight in theory are opposed to all law. As a matter of fact they were quick to seek every protection that the law could throw around them. They conceived it to be their duty to hate prosperity, and to try by every means to destroy the visible evidence of prosperity. They assumed that they were fit to seize control of the machinery of administration, they, who had demonstrated their unfitness even for those walks of life in which mediocrity at least is able to win a fair living, and talent always has a chance to rise. They could not have reached by any normal process of reasoning a conclusion so dangerous and so absurd. It is because of this they are to be pitied, but pity could not go logically to the length of wishing they were free.

Secretary of State Hughes has been forced by a sense of courtesy to apologize to the British government. Inadvertently he had sent congress word of certain British naval activities about which he had been told by a misinformant. The statement was not correct. However, congress believed it and on the strength of it, ceased for a moment to be niggardly towards the navy. So it is possible for some good to come out of error.

WHO'S A SCRUB?

By ESTELLE LAWTON LINDSEY

The universities are tired of the drag of the "scrubs."

Dr. H. H. Goddard, Ohio State university psychiatrist, has risen to announce that a scrub is always a scrub and should keep out of the universities and attend to the business of scrubs—presumably scrubbing.

Estelle Lawton Lindsey

The learned gentleman says "facts are facts and must be faced" and shows that every stock man insists on having the right breeds.

Fine and dandy. But what is the test?

I have been laboring under the delusion that college work was of such a character that only people of some native ability could do it. Have I been mistaken wholly?

If the ability to do university work is not a proof of the right university training, what is?

By the standards lying in the back of the honorable head of the learned psychiatrist, I figure that Abraham Lincoln was a "scrub." He was certainly poor and humble enough in his early days.

Andrew Jackson was born in conditions of terrible poverty and obscurity. Millet, the wonderful French artist, was a peasant and lived in hideous poverty and suffering.

Napoleon was an obscure Corsican boy. The vast majority of world famous singers were the children of manual laborers. Rodin, the sculptor, attained fame only after a life of poverty and painful endeavor. Ulysses S. Grant hauled rails in St. Louis. Maxim Gorky, Jack London, Ernestine Shumann-Heink, David Warfield and Alexander Hamilton, all would in all likelihood, because of the poverty and obscurity of their early years, have been classed by Dr. Goddard as "scrubs" and denied education.

And, to bring the discussion down to date, consider some facts recently made public by a U. S. senate committee report. A study of the careers of 25 railway presidents all of whom are now receiving salaries of more than $50,000 a year, shows that virtually all of them began as workers in the ranks.

Of the 25 only ten were college men; the rest were presumably "scrubs."

If the distinguished psychiatrist is wedded to facts let him consider these. Perhaps if he gave a little more study to history and a little less time to theorizing he might know that before he bars "scrubs" from the universities it will be necessary to decide who are and who are not "scrubs."

Who is going to decide? Harvard has taken a hand in trying to limit the ranks of students. She has decided against Hebrews and the dark races.

Well, Christ was a Jew, so was Disraeli!, Alexander Dumas was part negro; Gautama Buddha was a Hindoo; Confucius Chinese; Booker Washington a quadroon and Paul Lawrence Dunbar a full blooded negro.

Would such men have been a drag on universities?

Does Dr. Goddard claim that he himself is more eminent than the people I have named? And finally does he realize the meaning of democracy?

I think not.

THE RIGHT WORD

By W. CURTIS NICHOLSON

JACK ON SHALL AND WILL

(Find the error in this article)

"Jack, tell me some more about the use of shall and will."

"Of course you know that when you say, 'I shall,' you are only making an assertion about the future. There is no implied thought of determination. For example, the expression, 'I shall be glad to see you,' merely predicts your future state of gladness. On the other hand will, when used with the pronoun I, implies determination. Consequently, when you say, 'I will do it,' you are making a definite promise."

"Do the same rules hold for should and would?"

"Yes."

"Then is it correct to say, 'I would like to help you'?"

"No. Never put together such a combination as 'I would like.' Your desire or determination is fully expressed by the word like, and you are repeating yourself when you say, 'I would like.' Furthermore, there is not sense in being determined to like."

"Are there any other wrong combinations of this kind?"

"Many. The following are a few of them: I would appreciate; I would want; I would consider; I would hope; I would think; I would feel."

"Thank you, Jack, I'll come to you with my next problem."

The Error

. . . you are only making an assertion about the future.

. . . you are making an assertion only about the future.

Vocabulary

If you are a habitue of a certain place of amusement, you are a habitual frequenter of that place. The word is pronounced ha-bich u-e' (a as in final; i as in hit; u as in full; e as in prey).

Queries

Robert Vogel contends that affect, instead of effect is the right word in the following sentence, and he is right: "I do not want this drive to effect (the right word is affect) the collections for any of the preceding weeks in March."

THE LISTENING POST

By James W. Foley

JAMES W. FOLEY

There are a lot of drones of the imagination.

And often we have to exercise them.

Drive them out.

Get rid of them.

Before we can do the job we have to do.

* * *

All of us have them.

They infest our minds like larvae in stagnant waters.

And always they intrude their lazy suggestions.

Making us wonder after all if the thing we want to do can be done.

And they do us a lot of harm.

Weaken our efforts.

Waste our strength.

Nullify our endeavors.

* * *

And as the individual has them so the community has them.

Society has them.

And it takes constant effort to drive them off.

For we find them always buzzing about when there is a job to be done.

* * *

We might make a list of some of the more obnoxious of them:

"Let's quit."

"What's the use?"

"It can't be done."

"Looks foolish to me."

"What for?"

"What's the good of it?"

"The old way was good enough."

* * *

So we might go on and list a score of these drones and deadweights of the imagination.

For there is always a backward movement of the pendulum when there has been a forward movement.

And whenever somebody says: "Let's go on," one of the drones of the imagination says: "Let's quit!"

* * *

The "let's quit" fellows have done little in the world.

The work and advance of the world has been done by the fellows who wanted to go on.

Columbus had some sailors who wanted to quit.

They had gone far enough.

The drones and deadweights of the imagination had them by the throat.

* * *

But Columbus was one of the "let's go on" spirits.

Doubtless there were times when the "let's quit" pests whispered to him.

Made him half doubt himself.

Made him wonder if it was not all a wild goose chase.

But he exercised the spirits.

Got rid of them.

Drove them out.

And went on.

* * *

So in every high endeavor the spirit hears often the whisper of the drones and deadweights of the imagination.

The buzzing blue bottle flies of laziness and doubt.

Calling upon industry to stop.

Urging valor to quit.

Seeking to deaden spirit and put effort to sleep.

* * *

These are the pests of the spirit that need to be driven out.

And we all have them at times.

All of us have our times of doubt and wonder and near despair.

And then the drones of the imagination come in clouds and with a furious buzzing.

Songs of the Poets

There's Wisdom in Women—By Rupert Brooke

"Oh love is fair and love is rare;" my dear one she said,
"But love goes lightly over." I bowed her foolish head,
And kissed her hair and laughed at her. Such a child was she;
So new to love, so true to love, and she spoke so bitterly.

But there's wisdom in women, of more than they have known,
And thoughts go blowing through them, are wiser than their own,
Or how should my dear one, being ignorant and young,
Have cried on love so bitterly, and with so true a tongue?

THE DESIRE OF ALL NATIONS

By DR. FRANK CRANE

SOMEWHERE in the old prophets it is predicted that there shall be a country which shall draw to itself the desire of all nations. Its sons and daughters shall come from far, and fly to it as doves to their windows.

Such a nation at present seems to be the United States of America.

At every border an eager multitude is pressing to come in. We have immigration laws that must be strictly enforced to prevent an indigestible hord of foreigners from invading us.

The reason, of course, is obvious. Here is prosperity, while abroad are hopelessness and bankruptcy.

Here the common workman receives a stipend that seems to the worker in the nations of Europe to be fabulous.

Here are no century-old traditions of caste rendering it difficult, if not impossible, for the sons of the poor to break through into affluence.

Here is opportunity for all, liberty of movement, and freedom of opinion.

Here is the chance for those who have lived in penury to educate their children entirely at public expense, and to see them free to occupy any position in society they may deserve.

Here is practical religious liberty.

All these forces, therefore—economic, sentimental, and political—enter into the magnetism which draws to the United States people from all over the world.

A striking illustration of this was offered in the news items some time ago.

Juarez is a town in Mexico on the border of the United States. The officials of that place appealed to the government at Mexico City for help in caring for some 3000 stranded Mexicans, some of whom had walked as far as 500 miles seeking entry into the United States, where they thought they could get work.

These wanderers had heard reports of jobs paying fabulous wages across the border. They had come into Juarez on passenger and freight trains, on burros, and afoot, seeking admission into the neighboring country. Most of them were peons, some were Indians, and the majority of them were barred because they could not pass the literacy test.

Acting Mayor Manuel Alvarate of Juarez said that about 300 men a day were reaching the town, seeking jobs across the border. There is no limit on immigration of Mexicans from Mexico, provided immigration requirements are passed, but only about 200 a day can be examined.

The time is past when the miseries of the world can be healed by immigration. There are no more uninhabited Americas except those regions that call for the most vigorous pioneer life.

And it behooves each country to settle its population for itself.

EASTERN POINT OF VIEW

PARTY PROMISES

[New York Tribune]

President Harding's invitation to the senate to adhere, with necessary reservations, to the protocol establishing the Permanent Court of International Justice is in line with American conviction and policy. It is also in line with the declarations of the republican national platform of 1920.

The last republican platform justly criticized Wilson's paris program on the ground that it "ignored the universal sentiment of Americans for generations past in favor of international law and arbitration, and it rested the hope of the future upon mere expediency and negotiation." The republican party demanded an "association based upon international justice" and providing methods "which shall maintain the rule of public right by the development of law and the decision of impartial courts."

The United States now has an opportunity to enter such a judicial association for world peace. That is the true approach to the arbitration and composition of international disputes and to the creation of a body of world law restraining national aggressions. This permanent court offers the substance of international justice, while the league's political machinery offers only its shadow. American principles will be vindicated and a long step toward world security will be taken if the senate joins the President in making the United States a partner in full standing in the beneficent work of the permanent court.

COMMENT ON DAY'S NEWS

By HENRY JAMES

So long ago died the echo of the last gun of the Civil war, that only those remember who now are old. Those who had reached the age permitting them to be soldiers then, are venerable.

HENRY JAMES

So long ago those days seem, that the rising generation knows of them but vaguely. The other day died the widow of John A. Logan. The printing of her name touched no chord of memory in the young. They are of other times.

The commander-in-chief of the Grand Army has been visiting southern California. He has been welcomed warmly; a fine, hale American whom it is a pleasure to meet. As he looked about him over the average throng that greeted him, he saw, of course, some gray heads indicative of a period of life reaching back to the time when he was summoned to the colors; but only a few such. Most of those who listened to him, representative business and professional men, men of large affairs and influence as they might be, knew of those stirring days, only that which their fathers had told them, and the fathers had passed on.

How many more commanders-in-chief of the Grand Army? Not many. The ranks are thinning fast and faster. Feebler grows the tumult of the marching of the veterans of the sixties. In a little while, no more: none to command and none to be commanded. Life hurries along, forgetting.

* * *

A peddler of narcotics, sent to jail for a year, said that he was glad of it. He thought that the period of abstention, he being an addict, would cure him. It is very doubtful, however. A sentence five times as long might give him a chance. There is not much in a drug addict on which to build a character.

There is a certain film actress, of no special importance in her professional roles, who twice has been named as co-respondent. This is a dubious form of publicity.

Perhaps she has been misrepresented, which would argue a pair of very serious errors, but if she hasn't, the film world would be bettered by her retirement. Co-responding as a regular business cannot be looked upon with favor.

Borah, urging the republican party to be united, is a singular spectacle. Long ago he fell off the party fence, after having balanced there precariously for a good while. It is not quite clear where he landed, but it certainly was not on republican territory.

Now, instead of climbing back, he asks the rest of the party to mount the fence and fall down where he is, wherever that is. It is doubtful that the organization craves the attainment of unity by a method so unique.

There is a growing belief that peace soon will be established in the Ruhr region. Meanwhile there will be plenty of correspondents to tell just how this is to be brought about. They will be guessing, of course, which is everybody's privilege.

Secretary Hughes makes a matter very clear when he undertakes the job. He has been explaining why there is no chance of recognizing the Russian government.

Lenine and Tchitcherin have been making pleasing assurances of good intent. Here and there an American has seemed to believe them. The secretary is not of the number. In 1918 the soviets issued a decree that "Unconditionally and without exception, all foreign loans are nullified." This decree has not been changed nor abated. While it stands, recognition is impossible. In the face of it, no personal pledge from official bolshevist source could have a value.

Moreover, Russia is still trying to pour into this country, of whose charity she has partaken, the poisonous seeds designed to blossom into red revolution.

WATCHING THE PARADE

BY JOHN DILGRIM

I'm not so sure that we're fit to govern ourselves, we Americans. I hate to say it. I've always boasted about our innate and acquired superiority to other peoples, even to the point of making myself detested by sturdy Britons and defined French, who thing we are nationally nix. But now I'm not so sure.

After all, the sort of government furnished itself by a nation of nitwits could not be so much. Could it?

The reason for this momentary and probably passing dejection is that I was compelled to post myself on a corner of a busy street for half an hour. Automobiles, trucks and flivvers hurried to and from. Pedestrians crossed the street slantwise. It occurred to me that most of the pillars of our nation did not walk at right angles, but jay-walked. Also not many of them looked before they leaped. They just booted ahead into the stream of traffic, depending upon a kind Providence and rubber heels to save them from harm.

"I'll tag 'em," I said to myself. "Those I know. This is my part of town and I'll know a good many."

I did not count the strangers at all. But two bank presidents came mighty near getting kicked into hospitals by yammering Fords driven by little colored boys. A physician, waving his arm in a dignified way, talking to a dignified stranger, was almost lammed by an undignified sedan in which several little flappers were giggling. Half a dozen ladies put down their heads—in former days they would have also picked up their skirts—and scuttled for the other side without bothering to look out for the cars. Clerks, cake-eaters, buyers, merchants did the same trick. Not more than four in seven took the ordinary precaution of looking up. The automobilists were better, but not so good. I'm going, personally, to have one young man fired for the way he drove his employer's car into the thronged street.

If only four persons in seven have sense enough to watch their step, what chance have we for first-rate government in a country we govern ourselves?

DO YOU KNOW THAT—?

"Well," he said, "what d'you think of this? How's this for a complication?"

Loder turned round. "I think," he said, quietly, "that we can't overestimate it."

Lakely laughed and took a long pull at his cigar. "And we mustn't be afraid to let the Sefborough crowd know it, eh?" He waved his hand to the poster of the first edition that hung before his desk.

Loder, following his glance, smiled.

Lakely laughed again. "They might have known it all along, if they'd cared to deduce," he said. "Did they really believe that Russia was going to sit calmly looking across the Heri-Rud while the Shah played at mobilizing? But what became of you last night? We had a regular prophesying of the whole business at Bramfen's; the great Fraide looked in for five minutes. I went on with him to the club afterwards and was there when the news came in. 'Twas a great night!"

Loder's face lighted up. "I can imagine it," he said, with an unusual touch of warmth.

Lakely watched him intently for a moment. Then with a quick action he leaned forward and rested his elbows on the desk.

"It's going to be something more than imagination for you, Chilcote," he said impressively. "It's going to be solid earnest!" He spoke rapidly and with rather more than his usual shrewd decisiveness; then he paused to see the effect of his announcement.

Loder was still studying the flaring poster. At the other's words he turned sharply. Something in Lakely's voice, something in his manner, arrested him. A tinge of color crossed his face.

"Reality?" he said. "What do you mean?"

For a further space his companion watched him; then with a rapid movement he tilted back his chair.

"Yes," he said. "Yes; old Fraide's instincts are never far out. He's quite right. You're the man!"

Still quietly, but with a strange undercurrent of excitement, Loder left the fire, and, coming forward, took a chair at Lakely's desk.

"Do you mind telling me what you're driving at?" he asked, in his old, laconic voice.

Lakely still scrutinized him with an air of brisk satisfaction; then with a gesture of finality he tossed his cigar away.

"My dear chap," he said, "there's going to be a breach somewhere—and Fraide says you're the man to step in and fill it! You see, five years ago, when things looked lively on the Gulf and the Bundar Abbas business came to light, you did some promising work; and a reputation like that sticks to a man—even when he turns slacker! I won't deny that you've slacked abominably," he added, as Loder made an uneasy movement, "but slacking has different effects. Some men run to seed, others mature. I had almost put you down on the black list, but I've altered my mind in the last two months."

Again Loder stirred in his seat. A host of emotions were stirring in his mind. Every word wrung from Lakely was another stimulus to pride, another subtle tribute to the curious force of personality.

"Well?" he said. "Well?"

Lakely smiled. "We all know that Sefborough's ministry is—well, top-heavy," he said. "Sefborough is building his card house just a story too high. It's a toss-up what'll upset the balance. It might be the army, of course, or it might be education; but it might quite as well be a matter of foreign policy!"

They looked at each other in comprehensive silence.

"You know as well as I that it's not the question of whether Russia comes into Persia, but the question of whether Russia goes out of Persia when these Hazaras are subdued! I'll lay you what you like, Chilcote, that within one week we hear that the risings are suppressed, but that Russia, instead of retiring, has advanced those tempting twenty miles and comfortably ensconced herself at Meshed—as she ensconced herself on the island of Ashurada. Lakely's nervous, energetic figure was braced, his light-blue eyes brighteneu, by the intensity of his interest.

"If this news comes before the Easter recess," he went on, "the first nail can be hammered in on the motion for adjournment. And if the right man does it in the right way, I'll lay my life 'twill be a nail in Sefborough's coffin."

Loder sat very still. Overwhelming possibilities had suddenly opened before him. In a moment the unreality of the past months had become real; a tangible justification of himself and his imposture was suddenly made possible. In the stress of understanding, he, too, leaned forward, and, resting his elbows on the desk, took his face between his hands.

For a space Lakely made no remark. To him man and man's moods came second in interest to his paper and his party politics. That Chilcote should be conscious of the glories he had opened up seemed only natural; that he should show that consciousness in a becoming gravity seemed only right. For some seconds he made no attempt to disturb him; but at last his own irrepressible activity made silence unendurable. He caught up his pencil and tapped impatiently on the desk.

"Chilcote," he said, quickly and with a gleam of sudden anxiety, "you're not by any chance doubtful of yourself?"

At sound of his voice Loder lifted his face; it was quite pale again, but the energy and resolution that had come into it when Lakely first spoke were still to be seen.

"No, Lakely," he said, very slowly, "it's not the sort of moment in which a man doubts himself."

CHAPTER XIX

AND so it came about that Loder was freed from one responsibility to undertake another. From the morning of March 27th, when Lakely had expounded the political programme in the offices of the St. George's Gazette, to the afternoon of April 1st he found himself a central figure in the whirlpool of activity that formed itself in Conservative circles.

With the acumen for which he was noted, Lakely had touched the key-stone of the situation on that morning; and succeeding events, each fraught with its own importance, had established the precision of his forecast.

Minutely watchful of Russia's attitude, Fraide quietly organized his forces and strengthened his position with a statesmanlike grasp of opportunity; and to Loder the attributes displayed by his leader during those trying days formed an endless and absorbing study. Setting the thought of Chilcote aside, ignoring his own position and the risks he daily ran, he had fully yielded to the glamour of the moment, and in the first freedom of a loose rein he had given unreservedly all that he possessed of activity, capacity, and determination to the cause that had claimed him.

Singularly privileged in a constant personal contact with Fraide, he learned many valuable lessons of tact and organization in those five vital days during which the tactics of a whole party hung upon one item of news from a country thousands of miles away. For should Russia subdue the insurgent Hazaras and, laden with the honors of the peacemaker, retire across the frontier, then the political arena would remain undisturbed; but should the all-important movement predicted by Lakely become an accepted fact before Parliament rose for the Easter recess, then the first blow in the fight that would rage during the succeeding session must inevitably be struck. In the mean time it was Fraide's difficult position to wait and watch and yet preserve his dignity.

It was early in the afternoon of March 29th that Loder, in response to a long-standing invitation, lunched quietly with the Fraides. Being delayed by some communications from Wark, he was a few minutes late in keeping his appointment, and on being shown into the drawing-room found the little group of three that was to make up the party already assembled—Fraide, Lady Sarah—and Eve. As he entered the room they ceased to speak, and all three turned in his direction.

In the first moment he had a vague impression of responding suitably to Lady Sarah's cordial greeting; but he knew that immediately and unconsciously his eyes turned to Eve, while a quick sense of surprise and satisfaction passed through him at sight of her. For an instant he wondered how she would mark his avoidance of her since their last eventful interview; then instantly he blamed himself for the passing doubt. For, before all things, he knew her to be a woman of the world.

He took Fraide's outstretched hand; and again he looked towards Eve, waiting for her to speak.

She met his glance, but said nothing. Instead of speaking she smiled at him—a smile that was far more reassuring than any words, a smile that in a single second conveyed forgiveness, approbation, and a warm, almost tender sense of sympathy and comprehension. The remembrance of that smile stayed with him long after they were seated at table; and far into the future the remembrance of the lunch itself, with its pleasant private sense of satisfaction, was destined to return to him in retrospective moments. The delightful atmosphere of the Fraides' home life had always been a wonder and an enigma to him; but on this day he seemed to grasp its meaning by a new light, as he watched Eve soften under its influence and felt himself drawn imperceptibly from the position of a speculative outsider to that of an intimate. It was a fresh side to the complex, fascinating life of which Fraide was the master spirit.

These reflections had grown agreeably familiar to his mind; the talk, momentarily diverted into social channels, was quietly drifting back to the inevitable question of the "situation" that in private moments was never far from their lips, when the event that was to mark and separate that day from those that had preceded it was unceremoniously thrust upon them.

Without announcement or apology, the door was suddenly flung open and Lakely entered the room.

His face was brimming with excitement, and his eyes flashed. In the first haste of the entry he failed to see that there were ladies in the room, and, crossing instantly to Fraide, laid an open telegram before him. "This is official, sir," he said. Then at last he glanced round the table.

"Lady Sarah!" he exclaimed. "Can you forgive me? But I'd have given a hundred pounds to be the first with this!" He glanced back at Fraide.

Lady Sarah rose and stretched out her hand. "Mr. Lakely," she said, "I more than understand!" There was a thrill in her warm, cordial voice, and her eyes also turned towards her husband.

Of the whole party, Fraide alone was perfectly calm. He sat very still, his small, thin figure erect and dignified, as his eyes scanned the message that meant so much.

Eve, who had sprung from her seat and passed round the table at sound of Lakely's news, was leaning over his shoulder, reading the telegram with him. At the last word she lifted her head, her face flushed with excitement.

"How splendid it must be to be a man!" she exclaimed. And without premeditation her eyes and Loder's met.

In this manner came the news from Persia, and with it Loder's definite call. In the momentary stress of action it was impossible that any thought of Chilcote could obtrude itself. Events had followed each other too rapidly, decisive action had been too much thrust upon him, to allow of hesitation; and it was in this spirit, under this vigorous pressure, that he made his attack upon the government on the day that followed Fraide's luncheon party.

That indefinable attentiveness, that alert sensation of impending storm, that is so strong an index of the parliamentary atmosphere was very keen on that memorable first of April. It was obvious in the crowded benches on both sides of the House—in the oneness of purpose that insensibly made itself felt through the ranks of the Opposition, and found definite expression in Fraide's stiff figure and tightly shut lips—in the unmistakable uneasiness that lay upon the ministerial benches.

But notwithstanding these indications of battle, the early portion of the proceedings was unmarked by excitement, being tinged with the purposeless lack of vitality that had of late marked all affairs of the Sefborough Ministry; and it was not until the adjournment of the House for the Easter recess had at last been moved that the spirit of activity hovering in the air descended and galvanized the assembly into life. It was then, amid a stir of interest, that Loder slowly rose.

Many curious incidents have marked the speech-making annals of the House of Commons, but it is doubtful whether it has ever been the lot of a member to hear his own voice raised for the first time on a subject of vital interest to his party, having been denied all initial assistance of minor questions asked or unimportant amendments made. Of all those gathered together in the great building on that day, only one man appreciated the difficulty of Loder's position—and that man was Loder himself.

He rose slowly and stood silent for a couple of seconds, his body braced, his fingers touching the sheaf of notes that day in front of him. To the waiting House the silence was effective. It might mean over-assurance, or it might mean a failure of nerve at a critical moment. Either possibility had a tinge of piquancy. Moved by the same impulse, fifty pairs of eyes turned upon him with new interest; but up in the Ladies' Gallery Eve clasped her hands in sudden apprehension; and Fraide, sitting stiffly in his seat, turned and shot one swift glance at the man on whom, against prudence and precedent, he had pinned his faith. The glance was swift but very searching, and with a characteristic movement of his wiry shoulders he resumed his position and his usual grave, attentive attitude. At the same moment Loder lifted his head and began to speak.

Here at the outset his inexperience met him. His voice, pitched too low, only reached those directly near him. It was a moment of great strain. Eve listening intently, drew a long breath of suspense and let her fingers drop apart; the sceptical, watchful eyes that faced him, line upon line, seemed to flash and brighten with critical interest; only Fraide made no change of expression. He sat placid, serious, attentive, with the shadow of a smile behind his eyes.

Again Loder paused, but this time the pause was shorter. The ordeal he had dreaded and waited for was passed and he saw his way clearly. With the old movement of the shoulders he straightened himself and once more began to speak. This time his voice rang quietly true and commanding across the floor of the House.

No first step can be really great; it must of necessity possess more of prophecy than of achievement; nevertheless it is by the first step that a man marks the value, not only of his cause, but of himself. Following broadly on the lines that tradition has laid down for the Conservative orator, Loder disguised rather than displayed the vein of strong, persuasive eloquence that was his natural gift. The occasion that might possibly justify such a display of individuality might lie with the future, but it had no application to the present. For the moment his duty was to voice his party sentiments with as much lucidity, as much logic, and as much calm conviction as lay within his capacity.

Standing quietly in Chilcote's place, he was conscious with a deep sense of gravity of the peculiarity of his position; and perhaps it was this unconscious and unstudied seriousness that lent him the tone of weight and judgment so essential to the cause he had in hand. It has always been difficult to arouse the interest of the House on matters of British policy in Persia. Once aroused, it may, it is true, reach fever heat with remarkable rapidity, but the introductory stages offer that worst danger to the earnest speaker—the dread of an apathetic audience. But from this consideration Loder, by his sharp consciousness of personal difficulties, was given immunity.

Pitching his voice in that quietly masterful tone that beyond all others compels attention, he took up his subject and dealt with it with dispassionate force. With great skill he touched on the steady southward advance of Russia into Persian territory from the distant days when, by a curious irony of fate, Russian and British enterprise combined to make entry into the country under the sanction of the Grand-Duke of Moscovy, to the present hour, when this great power of Russia—long since alienated by interests and desires from her former co-operator—had taken a step which in the eyes of every thinking man must possess a deep significance. With quiet persistence he pointed out the peculiar position of Meshed in the distant province of Khorasan; its vast distance from the Persian Gulf, round which British interests and influence centre, and the consequently alarming position of hundreds of traders who, in the security of British sovereignty, are fighting their way upward from India, from Afghanistan, even from England herself.

Following up this point, he dilated on these subjects of the British crown who, cut off from adequate assistance, can only turn in personal or commercial peril to the protective power of the nearest consulate. Then, quietly demanding the attention of his hearers, he marshaled fact after fact to demonstrate the isolation and inadequacy of a consulate so situated; the all but arbitrary power of Russia, who in her new occupation of Meshed had only two considerations to withhold her from open aggression—the knowledge of England as a very considerable but also a very distant power; the knowledge of Persia as an imminent but wholly impotent factor in the case.

Having stated his opinions, he reverted to the motive of his speech—his desire to put forward a strong protest against the adjournment of the House without an assurance from the government that immediate measures would be taken to safeguard British interests in Meshed and throughout the province of Khorasan.

The immediate outcome of Loder's speech was all that his party had desired. The effect on the House had been marked; and when, no satisfactory response coming to his demand, he had in still more resolute and insistent terms called for a division on the motion for adjournment, the result had been an appreciable fall in the government majority.

To Loder himself, the realization that he had at last vindicated and justified himself by individual action had a peculiar effect. His position had been altered in one remarkable particular. Before this day he alone had known himself to be strong; now the knowledge was shared by others and he was human enough to be susceptible to the change.

The first appreciation of it came immediately after the excitement of the division, when Fraide, singling him out, took his arm and pressed it affectionately.

"My dear Chilcote," he said, "we are all proud of you!" Then, looking up into his face, he added, in a graver tone, "But keep your mind upon the future; never be blinded by the present—however bright it seems."

At the touch of his hand, at the spontaneous approval of his first words, Loder's pride thrilled, and in a vehement rush of ambition his senses answered to the praise. Then, as Fraide in all unconsciousness added his second sentence, the hot glow of feeling suddenly chilled. In a sweep of intuitive reaction the meaning and the danger of his falsely real position extinguished his excitement and turned his triumph cold. With an involuntary gesture he withdrew his arm.

"You're very good, sir," he said. "And you're very right. We never should forget that there is—a future."

The old man glanced up, surprised by the tone.

"Quite so, Chilcote," he said, kindly. "But we only advise those in whom we believe to look towards it. Shall we find my wife? I know she will want to hear you home with us."

But Loder's joy in himself and his achievement had dropped from him. He shrank suddenly from Lady Sarah's congratulations and Eve's warm, silent approbation.

"Thanks, sir," he said, "but I don't feel fit for society. A touch of my—nerves, I suppose." He laughed shortly. "But do you mind saying to Eve that I hope I have—satisfied her?" He added this as if in half-reluctant after-thought. Then, with a short pressure of Fraide's hand, he turned, evading the many groups that waited to claim him, and passed out of the House alone.

Hailing a cab, he drove to Grosvenor Square. All the exaltation of an hour ago had turned to ashes. His excitement had found its culmination in a sense of futility and premonition.

He met no one in the hall or on the stairs of Chilcote's house, and on entering the study he found that also deserted. Greening had been among the most absorbed of those who had listened to his speech. Passing at once into the room, he crossed as if by instinct to the desk, and there halted. On the top of some unopened letters lay the significant yellow envelope of a telegram—the telegram that in an unformed, subconscious way had sprung to his expectation on the moment of Fraide's congratulation.

Very quietly he picked it up, opened and read it, and, with the automatic caution that had become habitual, carried it across the room and dropped it in the fire. This done, he returned to the desk, read the letters that awaited Chilcote, and, scribbling the necessary notes upon the margins, left them in readiness for Greening. Then, moving with the same quiet suppression, he passed from the room, down the stairs, and out into the street by the way he had come.

CHAPTER XX

ON the fifth day after the momentous 1st of April on which he had recalled Loder and resumed his own life Chilcote left his house and walked towards Bond Street. Though the morning was clear and the air almost warm for the time of the year, he was buttoned into a long overcoat and was wearing a muffler and a pair of doeskin gloves. As he passed along the street he kept close to the house fronts to avoid the sun that was everywhere stirring the winter-bound town, like a suffusion of young blood through old veins. He avoided the warmth because in this instance warmth meant light, but as he moved he shivered slightly from time to time with the haunting, permeating cold that of late had become his persistent shadow.

He was ill at ease as he hurried forward. With each succeeding day of the old life the new annoyances, the new obligations became more hampering. Before his compact with Loder this old life had been a net about his feet; now the meshes seemed to have narrowed, the net itself to have spread until it smothered his whole being. His own household—his own rooms, even—offered no sanctuary. The presence of another personality tinged the atmosphere. It was preposterous, but it was undeniable. The lay figure that he had set in place had proved to be flesh and blood—had usurped his life, his position, his personality, by sheer right of strength. As he walked along Bond Street in the first sunshine of the year, jostled by the well-dressed crowd, he felt a pariah.

He revolted at the new order of things, but the revolt was a silent one—the iron of expediency had entered into his soul. He dared not jeopardize Loder's position, because he dared not dispense with Loder. The door that guarded his vice drew him more resistlessly with every indulgence, and Loder's was the voice that called the "Open Sesame!"

He walked on aimlessly. He had been but five days at home, and already the quiet, grass-grown court of Clifford's Inn, the bare staircase, the comfortless privacy of Loder's rooms seemed a haven of refuge. The speed with which this hunger had returned frightened him.

He walked forward rapidly and without encountering a check. Then, suddenly, the spell was broken. From the slowly moving, brilliantly dressed throng of people some one called him by his name; and turning he saw Lillian Astrupp.

She was stepping from the door of a jeweller's, and as he turned she paused, holding out her hand.

"The very person I would have wished to see!" she exclaimed. "Where have you been these hundred years? I've heard of nobody but you since you've turned politician and ceased to be a mere member of Parliament!" She laughed softly. The laugh suited the light spring air, as she herself suited the pleasant, superficial scene.

He took her hand and held it, while his eyes travelled from her delicate face to her pale cloth gown, from her soft furs to the bunch of roses in her muff. The sight of her was a curious relief. Her cool, slim fingers were so casual, yet so clinging, her voice and her presence were so redolent of easy, artificial things.

"How well you look!" he said, involuntarily.

Again she laughed. "That's my prerogative," she responded, lightly. "But I was serious in being glad to see you. Sarcastic people are always so intuitive. I'm looking for some one with intuition."

Chilcote glanced up. "Extravagant again?" he said dryly.

She smiled at him sweetly. "Jack!" she murmured with slow reproach.

Chilcote laughed quickly. "I understand. You've changed your Minister of Finance. I'm wanted in some other direction."

This time her reproach was expressed by a glance. "You are always wanted," she said.

The words seemed to rouse him again to the shadowy self-distrust that the sight of her had lifted.

"It's—it's delightful to meet you like this," he began, "and I wish the meeting wasn't momentary. But I'm—I'm rather pressed for time. You must let me come round one afternoon—or evening when you're alone." He fumbled for a moment with the collar of his coat, and glanced furtively upward towards Oxford Street.

But again Lillian smiled—this time to herself. If she understood anything on earth it was Chilcote and his moods.

"If one may be careless of anything, Jack," she said, lightly, "surely it's of time. I can imagine being pressed for anything else in the world. If it's an appointment you're worrying about, a motor goes ever so much master than a cab—" She looked at him tentatively, her head slightly on one side, her muff raised till the roses and some of the soft fur touched her cheek.

She looked very charming and very persuasive as Chilcote glanced back. Again she seemed to represent a respite—something graceful and subtle in a world of oppressive obligations. His eyes strayed from her figure to the smart motor-car drawn up beside the curb.

She saw the glance. "Ever so much quicker," she insinuated; and, smiling again, she stepped forward from the door of the shop. After a second's indecision Chilcote followed her.

The waiting car had three seats—one in front for the chauffeur, two vis-a-vis at the back, offering pleasant possibilities of a tete-a-tete.

"The Park—and drive slowly," Lillian ordered, as she stepped inside, motioning Chilcote to the seat opposite.

They moved up Bond Street smoothly and rapidly. Lillian was absorbed in the passing traffic until the Marble Arch was reached; then, as they glided through the big gates, she looked across at her companion. He had turned up the collar of his coat, though the wind was scarcely perceptible, and buried himself in it to the ears.

"It is extraordinary!" she exclaimed, suddenly, as her eyes rested on his face. It was seldom that she felt drawn to exclamation. She was usually too indolent to show surprise. But now the feeling was called forth before she was aware.

Chilcote looked up. "What's extraordinary?" he said, sensitively.

She leaned forward for an instant and touched his hand.

"Bear!" she said, teasingly. "Did I rub your fur the wrong way?" Then, seeing his expression, she tactfully changed her tone. "I'll explain. It was the same thing that struck me the night of Blanche's party—when you looked at me over Leonard Kaine's head. You remember?" She glanced away from him across the Park to where the grass was already showing greener.

Chilcote felt ill at ease. Again he put his hand to his coat collar.

"Oh yes," he said hastily—"yes." He wished now that he had questioned Loder more closely on the proceedings of that party. It seemed to him, on looking back, that Loder had mentioned nothing on the day of their last exchange but the political complications that absorbed his mind.

"I couldn't explain then," Lillian went on. "I couldn't explain before a crowd of people that it wasn't your dark head showing over Leonard's red one that surprised me, but the most wonderful, the most extraordinary likeness—" She paused.

The car was moving slower; there was a delight in the easy motion through the fresh, early air. But Chilcote's uneasiness had been aroused. He no longer felt soothed.

"What likeness?" he asked, sharply.

She turned to him easily. "Oh, a likeness I have noticed before," she said. "A likeness that always seemed strange, but that suddenly became incredible at Blanche's party."

He moved quickly. "Likenesses are an illusion," he said, "a mere imagination of the brain!" His manner was short; his annoyance seemingly out of all proportion to its cause. Lillian looked at him afresh in slightly interested surprise.

"Yet not so very long ago, you, yourself—" she began.

"Nonsense!" he broke in. "I've always denied likenesses. Such things don't really exist. Likeness-seeing is purely an individual matter—a preconception." He spoke fast; he was uneasy under the cool scrutiny of her green eyes. And with a sharp attempt at self-control and reassurance he altered his voice. "After all, we're being very stupid!" he exclaimed. "We're worrying over something that doesn't exist."

Lillian was still lazily interested. To her own belief, she had seen Chilcote last on the night of her sister's reception. Then she had been too preoccupied to notice either his manner or his health, though superficially it had lingered in her mind that he had seemed unusually reliant, unusually well on that night. A remembrance of the impression came to her now as she studied his face, upon which imperceptibly and yet relentlessly his vice was setting its mark—in the dull restlessness of eye, the unhealthy sallowness of skin.

Some shed of her thought, some suggestion of the comparison running through her mind, must have shown in her face, for Chilcote altered his position with a touch of uneasiness. He glanced away across the long sweep of tan-covered drive stretching between the trees; then he glanced furtively back.

THE CHARACTERS IN THE STORY

JOHN CHILCOTE, member of the House of Commons, a party to a marriage of convention, and confirmed drug addict, changes places in life with

JOHN LODER, who is his exact counterpart in appearance, after making a near spectacle of himself in Parliament, despite the promptings of FRAIDE, the great party leader. So successful is the deception that Loder becomes not only the strong political lieutenant of Fraide but is never suspected by the servants or by Chilcote's beautiful wife,

EVE, who, however, is mystified by her husband's change in manner. At a social function Loder is inveigled into a darkened tent, where

LADY LILLIAN ASTRUPP, close associate of Chilcote, is indulging her hobby of crystal-gazing and makes him remove his rings, exposing the give-away scar on his finger. Realizing his great danger Loder induces young

BLESSINGTON to tell her she had been deceived by the darkness in her first belief that Chilcote was the subject. The following morning his fears are submerged by the interest he takes in the news of political developments in Persia, Russia having despatched a large armed force to the seat of the insurrection against the Shah. In response to a message he goes to the office of LAKELY, publisher of St. George's Gazette.

He watched her in silence as she poured out the tea. [Guy Bates Post as John Loder and Ruth Sinclair as Eve Chilcote in "The Masquerader."]

PARIS CROOKS PLY ANCIENT SWINDLE

[By Associated Press]

PARIS, Mar. 26.—The Paris police have arrested a band of confidence workers who used colored drinks as their means of communication. When one member of the gang had marked a victim, he went to a certain cafe and ordered a drink which, by its hue, conveyed a special message to his associates as they passed outside the window.

Eight men and three women, most of them Australians, are in custody. They are charged with a long list of swindles practiced on homesick tourists, who, glad to meet someone who knew English, soon found themselves engaged to distribute large sums of money among the poor with the assistance of the new-found friends. The victims were asked to give financial guarantees of their own reliability.

VILLA-WILDE FIGHT WILL BE REAL ONE

By HENRY L. FARRELL
(United Press Sports Editor)

NEW YORK, March 26.—Something for that proverbial legal expert of Philadelphia to untangle will result if Pancho Villa, the little tan Philipino wins the world's flyweight championship from Jimmy Wilde, the half-pint sized Welshman.

If form in general and information from the other side about the physical condition of Wilde can be taken as a foundation for some predictions, then Villa will win the world's title and he will be officially in the position of No. 1 in the world and No. 2 in the United States.

Frankie Genaro, who went to the Olympic championship in the amateurs and later jumped with just as much success into the pro field, has three decisions over Villa and the last one took the title away from the pride of the Philippinos.

In some circles it was considered a terrible decision, but the fact remains that it was a decision, it went on the books and it made Genaro the American title holder.

* * *

Many questions have been asked as to why the tangle was not avoided by matching Genaro and Wilde for a cleancut title bout to the crown.

Those who cannot understand why Villa and not Genaro got the bout with Wilde are not conversant with the considerations that rule boxing now.

Money, not merit, is of the first consideration now in matchmaking. The boy who is the best drawing card gets the matches, not the lad most entitled to them. In many cases the same qualifications go hand in hand, but not in the case of Genaro.

He has no "color," while Villa is filled with it; Genaro is a boxer, a wonderful little fellow on the defensive and Villa is a fighter, one who is in there all the time making a show; Genaro is a quiet little fellow without much romance to him, as Italian faces are old faces in the ring; Villa is the first yellow man to gain prominence in the prize ring and the novelty makes him a great drawing card. Villa can hit and Wilde used to pack ten pounds of a punch to every inch of his diminutive frame.

That makes it a fighter against a fighter and that makes it a card. Villa and Wilde will outdraw any other little man attraction.

As every bride is beautiful, we have often wondered where all the homely married women come from.

Foley's Friendly Fancies

JAMES W. FOLEY

THE WATER'S BREAD

A little smile came down the way
From you to me one dreary day,
And with its sunny, cheery grace
In my heart found a resting place.

It came as quick as any wink,
Perhaps you did not know or think,
A passing by, a dreary day,
A smile in such a sunny way.

And as that brief smile came and went,
Somehow the clouds above were rent,
And I could see a bit of blue
Where the warm sun was shining through.

And then I thought how strange, the while,
The change that's wrought by one brief smile,
And how so light it fluttered down
To chase away the fret and frown.

And when you smiled and passed me by
I know you did not think that I
Was much in need of what it meant,
That the dark clouds by cheer be rent.

And then I met a friend, no doubt
In need, and that same smile came out
To greet him as he went his way—
Perhaps his was a dreary day.

And who shall say how far at last
The sunlight of a smile is cast;
Or where that sunny, cheery grace
At last shall find its resting place?

GREAT SCENE IN "ADAM'S RIB" AT THE T. D. & L.

In Cecil B. De Mille's new Paramount production, "Adam's Rib," the Chicago Board of Trade, with its wheat and corn pits, is reproduced with absolute fidelity to make real the scenes where Milton Sills, one of the five featured players in the picture, wins and loses a fortune in grain trading. Scores of trained brokers are used in these scenes to give a realistic touch to the excited action in the pits.

Then there is the Natural History Museum, where Elliot Dexter and Pauline Garon start a pleasing love romance. Great, towering, 30-foot dinosaur skeletons put this scene in a class by itself as a novelty.

Closely related to this prehistoric display is the expected and far-famed De Mille "cut-back" or "vision" scene in which the life of man of the time of the stone age is depicted. A huge redwood forest, the largest indoor set ever built for a motion picture, forms the background for the dramatic action. Seen in cave-day costumes of furs and thongs, are Elliot Dexter, Milton Sills, Anna Q. Nilsson, Pauline Garon and Julia Faye, the featured players.

Equally colorful, but in the modern sequence, are scenes showing a gorgeous ball at the Ramsay home, a particular feature of which is the color photography which gives a beautiful effect in the flashing of huge Japanese lanterns carried by the dancers.

Besides the featured players in 'Adam's Rib,'" which opened at the T., D. & L. Theatre Sunday, the excellent De Mille cast includes Clarence Geldart, George Field, Robert Brower, Forrest Robinson, Geno Corrado, Wedgewood Nowell and Clarence Burton.

Man wants but little here below, but he never gets quite enough.

THE FINDING OF JESUS TOLD BY REV. DR. FUNK

Dr. H. C. Funk, pastor, discussed "What a Man Finds When He Sees Jesus," at the First Lutheran church, yesterday. He said in part:

"He finds what he is looking for. Paul has been characterized as an ugly little Jew, by some people, and as a saint by others. Lincoln and Roosevelt were looked upon as models of manhood, ideal statesmen, by many; but they were also maligned by some of their contemporaries. Paul's injunction was, 'If there be anything of good report, if there be any virtue, or if there be any praise, think on these things.'

"Our mental attitude determines the make-up of the man. The 'knocker' is poisoned with the spirit of can't. It pays to be cheerful, for we can do it. The man who is down in the mouth, and who goes around with his shoes run down at the heels, is not going to inspire confidence in others by his slovenly character. Better 'doll up' a little, and look your best. Dress up your clothes and lift up your head, if you want to succeed in life. If you want to attract people, you must make yourself attractive.

"This principle applies to the church. Make it look good, attractive; moreover, it should be churchly in character. Be cheerful and kind to others. Show an interest in them, and greet them with a smile.

"Luke tells us that a certain rich man, Zaccheus, sought to see Jesus, but could not, for the press, and because he was short of stature; so he ran and climbed up into a sycamore tree. But the Saviour saw him, and said, 'Zaccheus, come down. He also said, 'This day is salvation come to this house.' Zaccheus had found a wonderful friend, but he also found peace and pardon when he saw Jesus."

SECRETARY HUGHES ANSWERS PROPOSALS

[By Associated Press]

WASHINGTON, Mar. 26.—Secretary Hughes has answered the second proposal of allied representatives in negotiating for the settlement of American claims for repayment of the cost of maintaining the American army of occupation in Germany. The reply was cabled to Eliot Wadsworth, the American representative in Paris and will be delivered by him at tomorrow's meeting of the allied representatives.
